MISSING GIRL

By Maryse Rutledge

"Why, he's passed out," it was Lorna, frankly gurgled in good fun. "You look annoyed, darling," she said to Tony. "But he's really quite a nice lad." Her green eyes challenged Jane with a hint of mockery. "What did you do to him, Alice-in-Wonderland? He was all right when I left him only about half an hour ago."

Bertram woke from his brief nap and heaved himself up, nursing a hand over his forehead as if dazed by Lorna's flaming hair. "Gosh!" he mumbled. "Guess I nodded."

Lorna with a gay laugh caught him by the hand and dragged him to the edge of the pool. "You need a shock. I dare you to jump in," she cried, so sure in her power to madden and yet hold Tony.

Bertram, with a sheepish grin, pretended it was his bid to show them what a sport he could be; tow headlam of brown, suede shoes, a handsome wrist watch, and a wallet fat with bills he pulled out in a pause. As he threaded it there was clapping and laughter.

Jane turned away, sickened by the exhibition. Tony stood at her elbow, silent, morose. Lorna had over-stepped herself this time. There was suddenly between him and Jane a kinship of storm-tost to the noise and splashing. He took her by the arm. "I can't stand this sort of thing," he said.

"Neither can I." Her heart had rocketed to his touch. Without another word they moved off together, to where twilight purpled the silken grass, and sounds from the pool grew fainter, died away. Jane walked with long free steps, her head a little bent, dull gold in the shadows, conscious of Tony as a tall and dark leader her. Fear and bitterness had gone from her. Talking to Bertram had somehow made her feel that whatever happened, she would always be Jane Carey poised on thresholds for adventure, and that she could never go back now. The only thing he had left to protect was Tony's belief in her fairy-tale self.

"It's been . . . wonderful—living here," she said gently. "But you'll be happier, won't you, when I'm out of your life." She didn't put it as a question. "We'll soon be in Paris—and you—you—"

"Free? There is no such thing." The old cynical weariness lay upon him as he strode moodily along.

"You have everything to make you free," Jane said.

"Money I've never earned," he answered shortly. "About other ties, the only fortunes that's stood up against the racket . . . Lorna's a lazy slither to lose sons of it, or to make more." He thought of it, dwelt with it, and then said plain. She'd spend it for him—little wench. Ever since he'd started it with—got that girl in the house to play her against Jane, it had been simply as the devil-may-care feeling had vanished.

It was very quiet where they were, beyond the gardens. Just a strip of trees, the road, then the trees. Jane, too, was thinking of Lorna, and Lorna's party in a week. Surely enough to introduce her to Tuxedo, as Tony's wife. "They'll think it strange if you don't wear the emeralds at the party—and I'll have to explain appearance together," slipped from her. Those emeralds—sacred to the Kaye wives.

Tony rounded an azalea bush and stopped short. "Lorna can't wear any other woman, can resist the lure of jewels, can't you? Haven't we trampled enough on family traditions?"

"You mean you have." Jane was breathing faster. "I only mentioned them because you seem to feel for Lorna's sake, we have to keep up conventions 'until we sail.' I wouldn't want you doing anything on earth," she said proudly. "It's harder for me just for you to go on with this masquerade. I think I'm sorry for you," she went on. "You don't really believe in anything or anyone, do you? You have the passion for Lorna Jane she's played fast and loose with you ever since you were children. But that's not enough."

"I enlisted in the war when I was 18." Tony had a hard voice. "You didn't know that, perhaps. It was only pull got me—well, where I went. I'm 35 now, and I'm dead—finished. I take this for granted"—He waved at the sweet rolling land. "Another war might wake me up—a new officer and a gentleman, but I wouldn't believe in it. The only other thing left to me to do is to marry a girl in my own world, and have children. At least Lorna will never bore me."

Every word drove through Jane with a cold finality. Before, he'd never talked to her this way, never let her see the weak and ugly of all his bored yet violent life. She stood against the azalea bush, her arms straight at her sides. "You have Mona," she said. "You have."

Then Tony pulled the grey storm still in his eyes. "Why my dear," he said, "I'm full of 'em." Suddenly, savagely he caught her by the shoulder. "You ought to know that. Remember a talk we had. I love you—Lorna or no Lorna, we couldn't go on as we were, living in the same house with everyone believing you my wife? I told you I'd go to the end of your room one night. I'll tell you something else now it's too late. If I had gone in to you that night, the great deal in both our lives might have been changed." His hands dropped from her shoulders.

It was almost dark. Lights sparkled through the trees and in the windows of the stone house from which, faintly, drifted music. The night world stole into Jane, hurting in its nostalgia and longing. "I shall be out of your life very soon," she said. "Suppose I ask you now to give me—all I have missed, before I go?" Her voice trembled.

Tony's tall figure in white seemed to sagle towards her.

CHAPTER XIV.
A REJECTED GIFT

Jane felt herself pulled closer and closer to the white blur that was Tony by the June evening. Her moment of madness sent blood to pounding and burning like fire. By resisting this longing, by resisting the despair that drove hey to his arms.

His face was tight and dark over hers, his arms had around her. "Are you content? Is this what you wanted?" Coals any man fight against the dazing gold rings of her hair, the drowned blue of hey eyes, and the tall, clinging fragrance of her body. But there was no joy to his mouth, only the fierceness of desire that she had called for.

No tenderness, no magic in that kiss that seemed to set her crushed everything beautiful in her. The terror of it wrenched her away. "I can't!" Her breath was coming in little gasps. Not this way—so, she couldn't have him this way.

"I thought so," he said thinly. "You hadn't the courage to go on as I warned you I was so sainl."

"I'm ashamed—sick and ashamed." Jane groped trembling to a tree beyond the azalea bush. The touch of its strong rough trunk steadied her. "You don't love me—and that makes the difference."

He didn't contradict her. Voices and laughter romped from the big stone house far across the shadowy stretch of Keystone lawns. "The party was going to wind-up soon," he decided.

There was the faint rub of a match. Tony's dark profile jutted out as he lit a cigarette. Presently he said: "Well, I suppose you're wise. We've messed up things enough as it is."

"I'm not wise!" Jane cried. "I don't! I never seem wise."

"No use wishing that." The glowing tip of his cigarette moved, described a circle. "Jane, you're young, very beautiful. When this farce we started is over, you'll have plenty of money—"

"I don't want money," Jane said low, strangled voice.

"You'll have plenty of love, too, my dear. Men will be crazy about you. Lorna's not the only fish in the sea. Forget me. I'm not worth it. I'm not worth it until we get to Paris. I suppose you realize—and he sounded bored—that Lorna's practically engaged—" Jane ended in a whisper. "I didn't care in the beginning—" Jane ended in a whisper. "I'm sick of the whole crazy adventure—Tony thinking I was some sort of strange, enchanted creature—Lorna—" Jane said that had shocked me into the state he thought I was in. He was quite after how he suggested setting me up as a—tea—a mistress. I'm not that—I'm too new. Then I didn't dare tell him that I'd cheated him of his gift of the evening—that had already—if it ever were known, he'd weren't Lorna's—he wouldn't believe we hadn't lived together. There'd be the devil of a row, and Lorna—" She was glad he couldn't see her face.

"Oh, you needn't worry," Jane said wearily. "I'll go through with it. But I think Lorna suspects there's something queer ever since the night I found her on your balcony. Tony bolted, and coming I listened. Two shadowy figures were talking. Lorna called:

Lorna called: "Where are you? Where on earth are you two hiding? Everyone waiting in the big supper—" There was an imperious, shrill note to her high voice that hadn't pleased her when Tony and Jane appeared from the rest of the party.

"Here." It was Tony who answered, strolling forward.

Obstinately Jane stayed where she was. She couldn't have spoken to Lorna just then.

"Ah, Cotter's with me." She heard Lorna announce. "He's almost dry after that dip in the pool, but he does need a powder. You invited him to your cold buffet, Tony?"

And Bertram's voice, sobered: "I made an awful ass of myself, Mr. Kaye."

Jane drew further back among the trees, watching them, all of them together, Tony evidently giving her time to recover control of her nerves.

It was peaceful under the great spreading trees. With a little start Jane sank on the damp grass. No, she couldn't go back there and face all those people. She was too unhappy.

Then she saw one of the figures coming back. It was Bertram Cotter. "Where are you? They sent me to get you." His voice sounded kind, a trifle anxious. And she blously lowered as he called the one name never heard at Keystone. "Jane—where—"

"I'm here." Jane sounded small and stifled in the night. She let her hands wrapped about her knees, her curls tumbling forward.

"Whatever's the matter?" Bertram stood staring down at her, his once humorous face grave. "Jane, baggy from the motorcycle swim. But what's happened? Tony's down, he's—" He felt the girl's hour had been a success among

FORMER KING'S "ATTACKER" RELEASED FROM PRISON

Happily re-united with his wife after he spent 13 months in prison for an alleged attack on the then King Edward VIII last July, is George Andrew McMahon, 27, ex-revolver fell at the feet of the people he wanted to know. Indirectly he could thank Jane for being at Keystone, and so he was in a simpler mood towards her. "I'm not that old pal," he said.

With Tony's fierce hard kiss still like fire on her lips, and the old loneliness following upon it, barriers were down. Bertram dared so far back—so very far. He seemed her only friend. Words gathered, then fell. Telling and telling what she never should have told anyone: "I didn't care in the beginning—" Jane ended in a whisper. "I'm sick of the whole crazy adventure—Tony thinking I was some sort of strange, enchanted creature—Lorna—" Jane said that had shocked me into the state he thought I was in. INJURED IN JUMP AS TRAIN MOVES

Arthur Thorburn of Nova Scotia Breaks Ankle

Jumping from a moving train as it entered the west end Canadian National yards, west of the Belleville C.N.R. station early today, a trackman who gave his name as Arthur Thorburn, 36, of Shelburne, N.S., sustained a badly sprained right ankle after he jumped to the ground from the moving train.

Thorburn was discovered lying helplessly in a ditch at the rear of the Salvation Army building on Station St. Local police were notified with Sergeant-D. Harman investigating P. C. Arnold to investigate, resulting in the officer removing the injured man to the Belleville General Hospital, where x-rays revealed the ankle not to be fractured, but badly sprained near the foot. Dr. G. R. Cronk attended the injured man.

When interviewed by the police Thorburn stated he had "jumped out" of freight trains on many previous occasions and from trains travelling at a much greater speed than the one he jumped on today. "I'll go today to the Belleville yards. "I must have either turned my ankle when I hit or struck a stone," stated Thorburn as he lay unable to get himself down, assisted by fellow-trackmen some considerable time later.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma and pop was taking a walk before supper, me asking him a lot of questions and him answering about every other question, like Yes gods here comes like Silex thru a human leech. When he ones started talking no power on earth can stop him. Boss till he winds down. The average human body is made up of 7 tenths water or some such figure, but He Silex is composed of 7 tenths gas. How are you Ikx, he says to every one, he said.

And he shook hands with some man, a new man with big size feet saying, Shake hands with Mr. Silex, Benny.

Which I did, not enjoying it much on account of his hand being kind of loose and clamp, and he said, I've got a boy just about your size, but of all the great kids he's the greatest.

And he started to tell pop difficult things about his boy, such as how he copies funny pictures out of the comics with a piece of carbon paper, so nobody can tell the difference hardly, and after a while, pop said, Quite a boy, quite a boy, well I guess we've got to get going now.

Just a minute, I want to tell you about my operation, it wont take 10 minutes, what a story, Mr. Silex said, and pop said, Good, just have it, I've been intristed in hospitals ever since I was layed low with ritty fever.

What kind? Mr. Silex said, and pop said, Ritty. It's a familiarly known as poker dot fever because the little rash which poker dots that come out all over you. I had quite a time, but it's all over now, and I'm glad of it, I'm not complaining but from what the doctors tell me it's better to somebody else, or another year or ore another year or so, just by having a cordiary conversation with them, but I dont take much stock in that, do you? he said.

Ekh? No, of coarse not, well I'll be seeing you, It's later than I thought, so long, Mr. Silex said.

And he quick krpt on going and so did me and pop.

W. R. MORTON, PUBLISHER

THE DATE IS SET

Six weeks from today the Province of Ontario goes to the polls. With the announcement of the date, the parties' active members can now proceed to the heavy task which lies before them of organizing electoral decision for the approaching

The lapse of time from the announcement to the election is ample for the discussion of the issues. In the six weeks will be bound up probably more work and more real oratory than if the campaign were carried over a two months' period. The people, there is no doubt, prefer a short campaign, which does not too much tax them and interrupt the usual currents of activity and business, to the long-drawn out campaign. A short campaign will allow as much scope for speaking, probably more than if speakers had to continue dealing with the same themes again and again until the election day finally arrives.

Six weeks in such weather as may be expected at this season in the province will be a gala time for those engaged in the campaigning. It means work but it means the most thrilling of experiences, meeting the people with their varied viewpoints and discovering their reaction to the eloquence of the political speakers and the wisdom and advice of the organizers.

Good crowds at all the local points can be confidently expected.

IN THE EAST

Execution of so many Russians for political offences in recent weeks is looked upon by many critics as explaining Japan's rapid movements in the North China quarrel. There seems to be a feeling that the Japanese see a weakness in Russian solidarity and are acting in a way different from the way in which they would act were Russia not undergoing internal struggle.

They also see that Japanese are holding to the view that the time has arrived for extension of her authority and markets in China for the sake of her overcrowded population. This brings visions of a new prosperity.

He would be a daring prophet who would define what is going to happen in the East. There have been guesses aplenty, one being that China is far from the weak power she was and that there is possibility of her so depleting the Japanese strength that Japan may cease to be a world power for some generations.

LONESOME COLUMBUSES

Although oceans can now be flown on schedule in a matter of hours, it is good to know that they can also be sailed by tiny craft, with crews as small as one man, in a matter of as many weeks as it takes. Captain Ludwig Schlimbach, former master of a Hamburg-American liner, is a man for such a job. Captain Schlimbach steered into New York Harbor the other day in a thirty-three-foot yawl, two months and seven days out from Hamburg. He had quite a time of it in the Gulf Stream, and what with two mainsails and a jib and a batful of wind every now and then, he found little opportunity to catch up with his reading. He arrived, however, hale and hearty—a sailor isn't a sailor if he isn't hale and hearty—and looking more like 46 than the 60 years to which he can lay credit.

What good, the querulous may ask, does such a voyage as this do? It doesn't do a bit of good. Sailing yawls across the Atlantic solves no problem. We are never going to have a yawl route to Europe. No, all that Captain Schlimbach's exploit proves is that there are still seafarers who can tackle the sea on its own terms, single-handed if need be, and come out on top. All the ancient deep-water sailors of history would be glad to take their hats off to this German captain.

Among them, of course, would be Leif Ericson and Columbus and Drake. But one not so ancient would be sure to be among them, the sunlight shining nobly on his bald head. That would be Captain Joshua Slocum, who took the Spray around the world in the late Nineties. The Spray was a little longer than Schlimbach's Sloerteheker—thirty-two feet nine inches—and her gross tonnage was twelve and seventy one-hundredths. Starting out sloop-rigged she came home yawl-rigged. Captain Slocum took her across the Atlantic to Gibraltar, then back to the South American coast, through the Magellan Straits and so on around—just like that. He worked out a method of lashing his helm and setting his sails so that he could sleep, cook and read. From Thursday Island to the Keeling Cocos Islands, a distance of twenty-seven hundred miles, he was at the helm only "about one hour, from land to land."

Captain Slocum told modestly of this adventure in "Sailing Alone Around the World." There is still no better bed-time book, at least for boys of all ages up to 80 or 90. But it's too bad the bold Nova Scotian couldn't have met Captain Schlimbach. The two would have talked themselves hoarse—and not about war or the authoritarian State either.—New York Times.

THE FINISHING TOUCH

To reduce the weight of their summer clothing, it is suggested that men should abolish pockets and carry hand-bags.

To show once more the passion
That I have always had
For being in the fashion
Since I was quite a lad,
My tailor I directed
To make for me to wear
From suiting I selected
A pocketless affair.

A natty little handbag
I hurried off to buy,
A really rather grand bag
To match my hose and tie,
With something quaint in catches
Not hard to open, when
I needed pipe or matches,
Cash, hanky, knife, or pen

But soon, as time proceeded,
I realized a neat
Addition would be needed
To make my coat complete;
Although the mode might mock it
And greet it with a grin,
I went and bought a pocket
To keep my handbag in.

ARIZONA LIMITS THE NUMBER OF CARS PERMITTED ON FREIGHT TRAINS

passing through that state. Seventy cars is the limit for any one freight train in Arizona, the law since 1912. Southern Pacific and Atchison and Santa Fe trains entering Arizona with long strings of refrigerator cars had to split the trains to conform with the law. Estimating that the law was costing them one million dollars a year the two roads took the matter to court and obtained injunctions restraining them immune from the State law. Bills limiting freight trains to 70 cars and passenger cars to 14 or 16 cars have been introduced in other states, always strongly backed by organized railway labor. Louisiana, Nevada, Oklahoma, California legislatures passed three bills, but the Governor of California vetoed the bill there. In the other states the laws were found unconstitutional by Federal courts. United States Senate recently passed a seventy-car bill and passed it on to the House of Representatives. What its fate will be in the House remains to be seen but the fact that the movement has reached Washington is regarded as of the utmost importance by the sponsors. Average length of all United States freight trains is 47 cars, but trains longer than 70 cars are the rule in large shipments from California and Florida, besides coal from the Alleghany fields to the coast. One hundred and twenty car coal trains are moved with one locomotive. Railways affected by the proposed 70-car legislation estimate that it would cost them $90,000,00 a year. The Railway Brotherhoods claim that consideration of employee safety make it necessary—that hand signals can not easily be seen from end to end of long trains, that air-brakes tend to lose their effectiveness, that there is danger from slack surges and buckling.

BELLEVILLE FAIR REPRESENTS the wealth and wonders of the Bay of Quinte district—the wealth of produce from the farms, a thousand farms condensed in one grand exhibition, field, forest, orchard, dairy, animals, mines, fisheries, all kinds of fowl, tams and wild—an exposition of the work of man and woman aided by Nature's bounty, in contributing materially to the wealth of Canada. We should be proud of Belleville Fair and the men and women behind it who have kept it in the front rank these many years, and we should be proud enough of our fair to support it in every possible way, especially by attendance and consistant boosting.

LOOKING BACKWARD

30 YEARS AGO

August 25th., 1917.

Mrs. George Moxam, Commercial Street, has returned home after visiting friends at Syracuse, N.Y., and Brockville.

The Rev. C. O. Smith, Pastor of Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, occupied the pulpit in Murray Street Baptist Church, Peterboro, on Sunday.

Mrs. W. Colling, Belleville, and Mrs. H. Colling and little son of Trenton, are staying with Mrs. E. Cox, at Lakeview Farm, Victoria Beach.

Mr. H. Ellwood of St. Thomas is visiting friends in the city.

The post office at Trenton is to be enlarged.

At a public meeting at Trenton a resolution was endorsed requesting the Town Council to purchase the waterworks system from the Hydro Electric Commission. The water system was taken over by the Commission when the purchase was made of the Seymour Power Company. The town can secure the system as a public utility for £90,000.00, payable in 30 year debentures.

AIR VIEW OF SHANGHAI SHOWS LOCALE OF LATEST CARNAGE OF SINO- JAPANESE WAR

An air view of Shanghai showing, in particular, the district around Nanking Road which has been subjected to a merciless shelling. A shell dropping in Nanking Road (No. 7), between the Wing Sang Co. and Co. department store (No. 8), and Sincere and Co. (No. 11), is partially destroyed both buildings and killed an estimated 400 persons. Also shown here are the Cathay hotel and the Bund (No. 2), which much damage has already been done; the Japanese consulate (No. 3); the Broadway Mansions hotel (No. 6), said to have been captured by the Japs; the Shanghai Race Club (No. 9); and the Park Hotel (No. 6.)

SKI-NAUTING

John Roosevelt, 24-year-old son of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, is pictured trying to maintain his balance as he "ski-nauts" in the surf at Cannes, France. Young Roosevelt recently created a sensation when it is alleged he hurled a glass of champagne at Pierre Pouveau, mayor of Cannes. A bouquet of flowers presented to Roosevelt by the mayor was thrown into the gutter.

THESE SIX RUSSIAN AIRMEN LOST IN WILDS OF ARCTIC

The six men comprising the crew of the giant monoplane "N-209", photographed in front of their ship just before they left an airport near Moscow bound on a projected flight to North America. WALL ST. CLOSE

New York, Aug. 25.—(AP)—A light stock market bobbed around erratically on conflicting cross-currents of speculative sentiment today. While speculators and investors staying clear of shares for reappraisal of near-term trends, trading was so sluggish during the final hour the ticker tape frequently was at a standstill. Turnover was 350,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE
Close

Toronto, Aug. 25—(CP)— The Toronto share market rallied to improve in the afternoon on the minor gains scored early in the early period. Volume was above the summer level with the action appearing chiefly in the cheaper golds and immediately the yellow metal list narrow and all-inclusive premium for the day. Western oils were inclined to follow up to the afternoon and the base metals were mildly heavy on the whole. Industrials finally forged ahead on marginal gains of gains over losses.

In the industrial list the paper, implement, food and utility groups harbored more gains than losses. Massey-Harris common was in good demand and the price pushed up a half point to 8 1-4. Steel Canada Lake Papers added 3-4 to a point and Abitibi P'fd. moved 2 points and the common a minor fraction. Consolidated Paper and Hinde and Dauch, added fractions.

The Canada Steamship lines issued a statement showing the considerable volume and gaining of about 5-8 for the Common and 1 3-4 for the Preferred. Union Gas and Beauharnois ruled higher.

Gold issues sifting higher in substantial volume included J. M. Consolidated, Lake Shore, Sladen, Sullivan, Bidgood-Kirkland and Hard and Carter. Falconbridge, Falconbridge, Pickle Crow, Little Long Lac, Pamour, Wright Hargreaves, Central Patricia and Kirkland-Hudson Bay also registered improvement. O'Brien lost about 15 cents.

Weekly Crop Report

Extracts from reports submitted by Agricultural Representatives issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Hastings: Weather wet for the harvest of late oats. Farmers have the threshing on stook. Threshing and most of the crop is out, considerable being badly weather-beaten. Late oats turning out poorly, 40 bus. Early oats, 60 bus. Spelt cheese offered on Belleville Board on Saturday, 1917 sold at 13 5-8c.

Prince Edward: Threshing progressing favourably, spring grain particularly. Barley is disappointing. All canning factories have had heavy runs of tomatoes for the time of year. Weather conditions during the past week have been most satisfactory. Rain early in the late blight are becoming prevalent, consequently prospects for the crop are not nearly so good as a week ago.

Lennox & Addington: Harvesting of spring grains is pretty well completed. Some late grain badly rusted and badly lodged. Owing to the rains, making it impossible to harvest everything, much stook threshing is being done. The threshing considerably, and quality generally are not up to expectations. Oats white and 304 colored cheese sold on the Napanee board on Saturday at 13 5-8c and 13 5-8c

Proper Carriage and Normal Weight Important to Beauty

By HELEN POLLETT

If you throw your entire weight on one foot, then on the other, you'll line up with the "waddlers". Overweight inclines one to cultivate that habit. Why be overweight? Discipline the appetite, cultivate strong resilient muscles and the reports of the bathroom scales will be satisfactory.

Another bad habit is hip swinging. What this habit does to the spinal column is not to the advantage of the figure. The body should move freely, easily and gracefully. Hip swinging interferes with graceful movement. It is a strain on the muscles of the back and thighs.

When walking, don't let the knees buckle. Hold the body tall, chest high and erect, hanging easily at the sides. Keep the head on the line. If the head is carried forward, the shoulders will droop and the back goes into a hump. If the head is held back the lines will protrude. Good carriage is half the beauty fight.

It is believed now that as dandruff is a fungus growth it is contagious. If you value the wool upon your head, don't use a comb that has been used by someone else.

When arrayed for the evening party, don't forget to tuck your bobby comb in your handbag. By the time you arrive, your locks will need smoothing.

Are your collar bones showing? If they are, you are not getting enough fats and carbohydrates or you are not holding yourself properly.

Close your fingers in the palms of your hands and swing the arms high and wide. Get into the habit of carrying your chest out and your tummy in. Massage the chest with coco butter at night and sponge with cold water every morning.

Weddings

SHIPPAM—GANNON

A very pretty wedding took place at Holloway Street Unite. Church at ten o'clock, Yesterday morning, when Edna Leona, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. Gannon, of Moira Street West, became the bride of Mr. Stanley Leighton Shippam, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Shippam of Schumacher, Ont. The Rev. R. E. Newman officiated.

The church was beautifully decorated with pink and white gladioli and fern.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a lovely gown of white triple sheer, with taffeta jacket made with short puff sleeves and high medel collar. Her tulle veil was caught with orange blossoms. She carried pink and white roses.

Miss Gladys Gannon, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore charmeuse silk in blue and rose effect with rose hat and shoes. She carried a bouquet of roses, gladioli and fern.

Mrs. Gwen Keelcher was bridesmaid, wearing Dubo blue suede lace, cut on princess lines, with white picture hat and white accessories. Her bouquet was of yellow gladioli.

Mr. Clifford J. Gibson was groomsman.

Wedding music was played by Mr. Earl Haley, organist of the Church.

A reception was held at the bride's home following the ceremony. A pink and white color scheme was artistically carried out with roses and gladioli. Mrs. Gannon in turquoise and brown crepe with corsage of roses and Mrs. Shippam in beige flowered chiffon with corsage of roses, received with the bride and groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Shippam left for Prince Edward County to spend their honeymoon at a summer cottage. The bride travelled in a cream wool ensemble with white accessories. Upon their return they will reside at Schumacher, Ontario.

Among the out-of-town guests were, Mrs. J. McGee, Mr. Darcy McGee and Mrs. M. Beauchamp of Timmins; Mrs. George Shippam, and Mrs. Gordon Byers and family of Schumacher.

Bride-To-Be Is Feted by Friends

Foxboro—On Wednesday of last week a large number of her friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Rodgers assembled at their home to honor their daughter Helen prior to her marriage to Charles D. Hill of Madoc.

During the evening Mr. Charles Vandewater acting as chairman briefly addressed the gathering. He then called on Mrs. Percival Lough who read the following address.

Dear Helen:

We your many friends of this community take this opportunity of conveying to you our good wishes. It is the more pleasing to us in view of the fact that we are permitted to share with you for a little while the joy and happiness which surround you at this present time —the happiest period of your life. We rejoice with you for to use the words of the poet:

O fortunate, O happy day.

When a lovely maiden finds its place

Among the myriad homes of earth

Like a new star just sprung to birth

And raided on its harmonious way

Into the boundless realms of space

You are receiving many and very splendid efforts in our community as a teacher of Marsh Hill School. You gave a freely of your time and talents in all the work connected with the social life of the neighborhood. We can assure you that your untiring efforts in connection with the school and Christmas entertainments will not soon be forgotten.

Though not as we would have wished with your "husband to be" we realize that he is to be commended in choosing as his life's partner, one who has endeared herself to all. Our hope is that the coming years may be full of happiness while your lives shed an influence for good on all with whom you come in contact. Please accept these gifts as a token of the esteem in which we are held. We extend to you our best wishes. May your journey thro life be long and happy.

Signed on behalf of your many friends, Mrs. Fred Campbell, Alison Vandervater, Ralph Campbell, Douglas Lancaster, Frank Gordon, Eileen Mitts, Allyn Finkle, Hazel Deline.

Mr. Frank Lough and Mr. Fred Campbell brought forward two occasional chairs. Helen very suitably replied expressing her gratitude and appreciation for the gifts and her pleasure at meeting so many from the community and especially the large number of her former pupils.

A bountiful lunch was served and after a social evening was spent the crowd dispersed to their several homes.

Crab Apples and Potato Bugs

By EDGAR T. MONTORT
McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service.

The yearnings always grew worse in spring. The sight of young green leaves on a tree brought a lump in her throat for it reminded her of other trees—a yard full of them—and back of the yard an apple orchard that looked so daintily festive at that season. She knew, too, that there would be scarcely shocking time followed by fluffy chicks running through the young weeds to the apple orchard. And in the gray, old weather-beaten barn back in a corner of the hayloft, a softly purring mother cat with two or three kittens sprawling and tumbling over her.

With a gesture of impatience Maryann Nelson dabbed at the aching tears that would come into her eyes and spill down her cheeks as she looked up from her typewriter and out the window across a sooty roof she saw the topmost tip of an elm tree in all the lacy daintiness of its early spring frock. The branches swayed gently to the rhythm of a breeze she could not feel and the pastel green of the leaves seemed to defy the dirt and grit of the big city.

It had been five years since Maryann had seen spring in the country and the worst was, she rejected bitterly, she had not appreciated its beauty before moving to town. Already bored with life, she was glad to graduate from high school she had persuaded her parents to let her take a business course and get a position. She was not needed on the farm and there was nothing there that she liked to do at the time.

"When a girl's got her head and heart set on doing something she doesn't get any satisfaction out of until she's tried it," Mr. Nelson had said wisely enough.

So now let her go without pester or ill feeling and she, determined to conquer the world, had set out in high spirits. Up to this time homesickness was to her merely a word to be found in the dictionary under H, but she soon developed a feminine wile to hide heart-breaking symptoms that put a shadow in the deep blue eyes and brought with that shadow a never been.

Maryann's wrote regularly, letters full of happenings on the farm and always with a question of some-one: "I know this won't interest you, but there isn't much else to write about . . ." Or she, to whom every detail was a bitter-sweet stab, would sigh as she read the letters, "It takes contrast to make some people happy," she mused, "but so often you can't go back."

"Can you tell me where I can find A. F. Jones's account? It isn't in the file where it belongs."

Maryann was brought out of her reverie by the sound of Bill Scott's voice and a quick flush overspread her face as she dropped her head to hide the tear that she knew was still loading guiltily on her cheek—one round, telltale drop of woe.

"Maryann, you've been crying," he accused in a voice resonant with sympathy. "What's the matter?"

But Maryann shook her head and tried to swallow the lump that was rising in her throat again. How could she tell him why she had been weeping when he did not even know that she had ever lived in the country? Somehow, she had been left ashamed of it— and hated herself for being ashamed. But there was something so distinctly urban about this well built, well-dressed coworker of hers; the very way he held his cigarette, the way he walked—everything he did reeked of the city.

"Let's go somewhere tonight," he urged. "I got a letter this morning that has upset me and yet I believe it'll be the best in the end. I want to talk it over with you. I need your help and advice."

Maryann felt so weary that evening that she had planned not to bring for Bill, but habit is a strong thing and she found herself getting ready with the same happy anticipation she had always experienced. She enjoyed looking her prettiest for Bill.

"It's just this way," he told her, dropping down on the divan beside her. "I got a letter from mother this morning and she says dad's not very well and she feels I ought to come home. It was hard as the dickens at first, but I've faced the thing out and it doesn't seem to me that I'll ever make a success as a business man. Six years ago I started in as a bookkeeper and— I'm still a bookkeeper. And here I've got nearly two hundred pounds of savings and enough that I use these fingers on my right hand. That's all it takes to be a bookkeeper. No, I see it now. I never have minding for a business man. I'm going out do the farm. Maryann. Dad bought a place three years ago when the doctors ordered him to the country. And the only regret I have—is you. I've hoped some day. Oh, well, you know but you'd never be happy in the country."

It was then that Maryann did a surprising thing. Quite boldly and ecstatically she flung her arms around his neck and crept up close to the two hundred pounds of brawn and muscle.

"Just leave me behind if you dare!" she whispered. "I bet you don't know a crab apple from a potato bug, but I can show you a thing or two."

HALLOWAY W. M. S.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of Halloway W.M.S. was celebrated with a sumptuous and most delicious dinner on Wednesday, Aug. 18th. One hundred and fifty people were seated at the long, artistically decorated tables, with a beautiful birthday cake gracing the centre of the longest table, representing the twenty-five faithful years of the Halloway Auxiliary.

Seven different auxiliaries, after partaking of the bountiful supply of very appetising food, wended their way to the church where an enjoyable program was scheduled.

The president, Mrs. Harry Townsend, opened with singing hymn 93. Mrs. Fred Sarles then led in prayer. Mrs. Harry Townsend gave a few introductory remarks. Miss Marie Townsend gave an address of welcome. Mrs. Arthur Anderson in dress. Mrs. Harry Townsend read a letter expressing Mrs. H. E. Denyes' regret at being unable to attend, due to illness. Mrs. Herbert Townsend gave the secretary's report which showed the Halloway W.M.S. had made over $2,000 during the past 25 years. Mrs. Fogarty and Mrs. F. Eggleton of Foxboro conducted the devotional exercises.

Mrs. E. Wilson and Mrs. G. H. Rose conducted the memorial service. A solo was rendered by Mrs. D. Rose. The names of those who have passed on during the 25 years are,—Mrs. Salisbury, Mrs. Mary Coleman Miss Hugh, Mrs. Simon, Mrs. James Elliott—and Miss Aralta Reid. Mrs. George Poste closed the memorial service with prayer. Mrs. Aubrey Reid sang a vocal solo. Mrs. Ben Brough of Fuller gave a reading. Mrs. Stanley Spafford, the first vice-president, was able to be present. She spoke on things of yesterday, today and tomorrow. Her address was very interesting and was well received.

Miss Dorothy Reid gave a reading. Miss R. Clarke sang a solo. A duet was given by Miss Letia Horton and Miss Bessie Stoecker. A very entertaining guiz, selected by Miss Shirley and Audrey Robson, also Miss Irene and Marguerite Elliott followed. Miss M. McMullen sang a solo. An interesting reading was given by Mrs. Clifford Lansing of Stirling. Mrs. Arthur Andrews rendered a solo. Miss Rea and Anne McCullough also sang. Mrs. McFarland of Montreal gave a few interesting remarks. The Rev. Mr. Tristram of West Huntingdon closed with prayer.

Mrs. Raymond Chambers lit the candles on the birthday cake. Mrs. S. Coy blew them out. M. G. Rose cut it and a piece of Halloway young ladies served it.

HOW OFTEN CAN YOU KISS AND MAKE UP?

How foolish can you be? Why it would turn from a honeymoon into a drive for your whole life in every month! You can say "I'm sorry" and kiss and make up, but the scarring has left. If you're wise you'll do something about your head. You won't be a three-quarter wife.

For three generations women have said another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature ease up the system, thus lessens the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure in the three periods of life. Taking from girlhood to womanhood. 2. Preparing for motherhood. 3. Passing "middle age."

Don't be foolish and wait, take LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND and Go "Smiling Through."

"They Gave Him a Gun"
Three Talented Stars Give Great Performances In Powerful Love Drama

Thursday and Friday, matinee daily at 2.30 p.m. and evenings at 7.10 and 8.15 p.m. Spencer Tracy, Gladys George and Franchot Tone are teamed for the first time as the principals of William Joyce Cowen's best-selling novel, "They Gave Him a Gun," playing at the Belle Theatre, Trenton, with a line of hit performances behind him that began with "Fury" and continued through "San Francisco", "Libeled Lady" and "Captains Courageous" is seen in one of his most thoroughly congenial roles in "They Gave Him a Gun" as the ex-circus barker who tried to make a man out of his wartime buddy, played by Franchot Tone.

For the first time the part is a distinct departure from anything he has attempted before. He is the small-town, bookkeeper who turns racketeer after the war, when he has learned the power a gun can give him. Tracy completely his culture, his smooth manners, his flair for dress. Tone has the dramatic role to date he is a wealthy who loves Spencer Tracy.

Gladys George, making her appearance under the M-G-M banner, plays the part of Mrs. Villalobos. In "The Word For Carrie", is the bad Cuban girl who comes between love for Tracy and pity for Tone. It is the sort of role that requires a person of her calibre can get her teeth into.

Robert Taylor, who gave Spencer Tracy a helping hand to fame in "San Francisco", and who has a long line of personal triumphs to his credit, gives up the light comedy with which he has been associated lately in such pictures as "Love on the Run" and the new Harlow-Robert Taylor "Personal Property" and returns to his first love, melodrama.

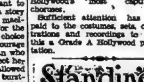
Here is neatly, red blood melodrama. While the original story was a biting indictment of war and the men who play fallibly interprets its spirit, showing the tragic effect of handing a gun to a weakling who was never meant to use it, the film is primarily a story of two men, caught in the mad abyss of war, both fighting for the same woman. She, that fatal combo forced upon her, has the courage to stick with it, while the man who helped to make her what she is turns from his friend whom he allowed to marry her. From the first shrieking shell to the last gunshot, smashing action builds to even more pulse-pounding conflict.

Joe E. Brown—Tonight

Joe E. Brown, one of the screen's funniest comedians with a splendid supporting cast, including Marie Wilson, Claire Dodd, Lively Clarence Kolb and lovely Florence Rice, will be presented at the Belle for the last times at the Belle Theatre in his latest screen entitled "Riding Down the Trail" at 7.10 and 8.15 p.m. In addition to the feature presentation an exciting Mack Sennett featurettes will also be shown, including an all star comedy, entitled "The Horses," also a very entertaining musical comedy that, is sure to please everyone, the last but not least the latest Bell Telephone Novelty, the first pictures of war-torn China and also the National Soap Box Derby at Akron, Ohio, with Belleville's own George Wilson, Canadian champion as entry in the Derby, among the various subjects that make up the complete newsreel.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Turn Off The Moon"
Gay Musical Hit Opens at the Capitol, Wednesday



"Turn Off the Moon", which opens at the Capitol, Wednesday is the gay a musical comedy as Hollywood has yet produced. Introducing three teams, Charlie Ruggles and Ben Blue, Kenny Baker and Phyllis Brooks and Eleanore Whitney and Johnny Downs, including three song hits that will be whistled by the audience as they leave the theatre, featuring dance numbers as dazzling as only movie dancing can be "Turn Off the Moon" is a hit.

The story kids astrology as a royal aid to romance and an additional headache to Charles Ruggles' frustrated sweetheart. The plot is developed so that it can plead on its own feet as a comedy. The surrounding glamour that the musical portions give it makes "Turn Off the Moon" a must on your picture list.

Charles Ruggles and Ben Blue as a new comedy team promise to become the next sensation of Hollywood. Ruggles' superlative performances are taken for granted but with Blue, who more than holds his own, the team works with an efficiency that is a pleasure to behold. Kenny Baker, tenor of the Jack Benny hour, and Phil Harris and his orchestra, make a perfect combination that can't be beat. Eleanore Whitney and Johnny Downs, together in their second picture, dance and sing and make more convincingly enough to give an authentic stamp to their oft-repeated off-screen romance.

Phyllis Brooks, musical portion of the picture that proves Paramount has a find when it makes the screen of the famous stage producing team of Fanchon and Marco a producer. Her knowledge of dancing, which she turned a bad vaudeville act into the largest unit-producing enterprise in show business, is responsible for the introduction of a dance that promises to become the next American craze, "Jamming". Her ability to select good dancers who are in addition as beautiful as you can find, turns her Fanchon-Marco into one of Hollywood's most captivating choruses.

Sufficient attention has been paid to the costumes, sets, orchestrations and recordings to make this a Grade A Hollywood presentation.

USED TO WAKE UP WITH A HEADACHE

Now Fresh And Lively Every Morning

Here is a man who wake up every morning with a dull headache. Then Kruschen transformed his days. Read his letter:

"I used to wake up in the morning with a dull headache. A year ago, I started taking Kruschen Salts regularly. To-day, I wake up feeling better and can do my day's work without any exertion. I can recommend Kruschen for anyone suffering from headaches and constipation, and for putting new life into you. I intend to continue with Kruschen for the rest of my life."—M.S.

Headaches can nearly always be traced to a disordered stomach, and to the unsuspected retention in the system of stagnating waste material which poisons the blood. Remove these poisons—prevent them from forming again — and you'll never have to worry any more. And that is just how Kruschen Salts brings quick and lasting relief from headaches.

Sports Roundup

By Eddie Brietz, Associated Press Sports Writer

New York—(AP)—What the big fight needs most of all is a break from the weatherman . . . which ain't getting it. Weather gossips say Bill Terry can go to Scotland any day the Giants don't want to sign that new five-year contract. . . Some of the boys around Brooklyn will lay even money Baron Gottfried Von Cramm and Jack Crawford will be married next time they meet. . . This corner will be surprised if Max Schmeling isn't already signed and sealed to meet Joe Louis sometime next June. You needn't expect an official announcement until after election day. . . .

One New York paper quotes Bill Terry as saying the Giants can't afford to lose a game against Chicago Cubs unless they can take the current "special" series. . . The other day John Downey was playing golf up in Westchester. . . His second shot on the par three 13th hole hit a dog and rolled into the cup. . . He says he made a birdie—a doggie! . . . Tommy Farr and his handlers are all set for Farr's jaunt to fight Joe Louis. . . . (So are a dozen other heavyweights, Tommy).

AUBURNS SWAMP ROVERS BY 32-15 IN TITLE MATCH

Local Lacrosse Team Proves No Match For Tricky Squad

SPOTTY DEFENCE

"Buster" Whitton, High Scorer of Night With Six

Launching a sustained forty-five minute offensive, that netted them twenty-five goals, after being held to a 7-6 score in the initial period, Peterborough Auburns coasted through to an easy 33-15 victory over the Belleville Rovers at the Wellington Arena last night in a sudden death game to decide the right to meet Oshawa Unionists for the Central Ontario Lacrosse League title.

Four hundred people saw the speedy Peterborough squad unleash a passing attack, that at times had the Quinte squad bewildered with its speed and accuracy. Flashing down the boards the Litt trio of speedsters left little or no difficulty in sifting through a spotty Belleville defence and by closing the first period scored practically at will.

With the wily "Buster" Whitton, veteran of many hockey and lacrosse campaigns, directing and leading the attack, Auburns in a fine demonstration of clever individual pastime treated the spectators to a splendid exhibition of lacrosse. Flash with Pete King, K. Creighton and Don Crowe backing up the diminutive Whitton in the goal-getting sorties cut loose with a goal-getting spirtare, that resulted in thirty-two markers before the smoke had cleared. Shots that burn like lightning down the floor in an offensive combination, that was pretty at the conclusion of a disrupted Belleville defence battled pitifully to stem the avalanche of goals.

First Period Even

The first period was productive of the best lacrosse in the series. The Rover line flashed a good offensive and held the thrusting Auburn squad to seven goals, while denting the twine behind R. Creighton for an even dozen. But they wilted before the passing onslaught of the visitors in the second period as Litts rammed home six goals, before the Belleville squad got a counter. Auburns picked two more, while Lalonde scored two for the homesters.

From this point on it was all Peterborough. The Litt Loop continued on a rampage, that had the spectators on their toes with their dizzy combination. Flash Kingperennial; Whitton, Auburns unrecited a sparkling offensive that netted them six goals in the space of sixty-five seconds with Whitton whirling six of Whitton accounting for three of them. Again in the third and fourth periods visitors in spite of the steadily mounting score continued their individual scoring seven goals in the third and eight in the fourth. Spectacular attacks on the part of the Rovers brought their total to fifteen.

Defence Wilted

The Rover defence wilted in the second period and failed to get organized for the balance of the game. Flashing Peterborough attackers went through almost at will and gave the Rover goalie no chance.

While the game was comparatively clean, Referee Bud Fisher of Peterborough handed out six penalties four of them going to the Rovers and two of these being majors to Smart.

"Buster" Whitton headed the Auburn attack with six goals while King, McGee, Crowe getting five each and E. Creighton accounting for four.

The perennial Joe Goudy with four goals to his credit stood out for the Rovers and at times drew the plaudits of the crowd with his tricky defence work. Lalonde, who accounted for five goals played a steady game with Tremblins, Day, Burdis and Logie flashing spots of good play.

Smart was fairly effective, while on the floor but weakened his team when he tangled with Auburn players and drew major penalties.

The teams:

Peterborough Auburns: Goal, R. Creighton; defence, Millar, Castle; centre, King; homes, Dallin, Whitton; rover, Crowe; subs, McGee, Warnell, E. Creighton, G. Creighton, Sloane, Chute.

Belleville Rovers: Goal, Fox; defence, Burdis, Smart; centre, Lalonde; homes, Tremblins, Gould; rover, Logie; subs, Battison, Trepannier, Robinson, Burley, Day.

Referee: "Bud" Fisher, Peterborough.

POINTERS ENTER SECOND ROUND BY BEATING TRENTON

Score 6-1 Victory After Four Games Being Played in Series

GRAHAMS NOT STEADY

Luffman Scattered Six Hits And Meraw Fielded Well

Scattering six hits well and fielding his opponents scoring in the initial inning, "Ding" Luffman hurled the Point Anne "Cementmen" to a 6 to 1 victory over the Trenton Grahams in a third and deciding game in the first round intermediate "B" play-offs of the O.A.S.A. at the Belleville Fair Grounds last evening. A bumper crowd of some 800 fans saw the Point Anne moundsman, who behind and score a trio of runs in the fourth and fifth frames when the winners pounced on Derry, Trenton hurler, for a flock of base hits and established on the whipping of the losers, who blew up in the clutches.

"Cementmen" bounded into form for a total of ten safe blows, seven of which came in the two frames on which the visitors managed up on Trenton and scored their lone run. Derry had to dish out an out to score after a fly ball was caught. The Point Anne squad added three more in the fifth, Bill Dickey, Whitehead and Scro accounted for these runs, although here again a trio of errors, when the visitors had the ball game safely assisted the winners. An estimable crowd of over 600 took in the game that saw the Trenton team eliminated and the Point Anne entered to the last round of the intermediate O.A.A. play-offs.

Meraw Smart at Third

"Tony" Meraw, veteran third baseman, supplied the fielding sensations of the pastime, accepting an even dozen chances in the only one bobble that had no bearing on the situation. Only two of the Cementmen played heads-up ball that deserved to win on the day's play. The Trenton first baseman got the pellet for a total of no less than seven put-outs, almost one half of which counted in the run scoring.

Dickey, Whitehead, Scro and Green wielded potent bats for the winners, while D. Anderson with a double, was the only Trenton batter to hit for better than a single. Not a member of the vanquished Trenton squad had more than one safe blow to his credit. Scro got the only other extra base blow, a double. Luffman struck out ten and Derry two, while neither moundsman walked a batter, the pitchers' control being exceptional.

Point Anne left seven stranded on the runners while Trenton left six aboard. With one exception for Derry retired the side in order for the first three frames.

The line-ups: Point Anne—Cameron, lf; Dickey, rf; Whitehead, 2b; Gaulin, 1b; Scro, ss; Green, c; Meraw, 3b; Luffman, p; and Bailey man cf. Trenton Grahams—Miller, c; Grey, 1b; D. Anderson, ss; Long, lf; Derry, p; Ellis, cf; Fuller, 2b; Emmerson, "rf; and W. Anderson lf.

There is to be a new intermediate O.R.F.U. group in Eastern Ontario this fall, according to the latest rugby football gossip being circulated around this district. Cornwall or Perth are to be the centres of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery and the Royal Canadian Signals, both of Kingston, the R.C.A.F. "Pioneers" stationed at Trenton and will group these new entries with the Belleville Rugby Club, making up a compact four teamed group. The Lake Shore group will be able to operate as in former years with the return of Lindsay to the fold, giving them Lindsay, Oshawa, Peterborough and Whitby.

The division of the east into two groups will assure four teams advancing to the provincial O.R.F.U. play-downs, instead of two, if the clubs were all included in one large group. Last season the east was so arranged up on Trenton and scored their lone Derry had to dish out an out to score after a fly ball was caught. The Point Anne squad added three more in the fifth, Bill Dickey, Whitehead and Scro accounted for these runs, although here again a trio of errors, when the visitors had the ball game safely assisted the winners. night's with.

At the call of Secretary Newt Thompson the O.R.F.U. held an emergency meeting at the Y.M.C.A. last evening. Kingston and Oshawa will meet in a sudden death game at Napanee on Friday afternoon, the ultimate winner to take first place in the league, with the loser to meet Peterboro in the league semi-final play-offs. If Kingston wins the semi-final open at Kingston on Aug. 30th, but if Oshawa wins they committee at Oshawa on the 31st of the month, with Peterboro the opponents, as third placed team. Neutral umpires were named. Incidentally the Canadian club reports that their O.R.A.A. gun was also.

There were exactly 47 goals scored at Wellington last night when the Belleville Rovers were rushed out of the lacrosse picture by the Peterboro Auburns to the tune of 32 to 15 in a wild free scoring game. The Peterboro squad will now meet the Oshawa Unionists in the league finals. Poor notandling coupled with a lack of effective attack on the part of the Auburns accounted for the large number of goals scored by the winners. President Gord Delaney stated today there would likely be no consolation games played to-day, including the Rovers, Cobourg and Newmarket each team will be permitted to bolster their roster with imports for this series, however. Incidentally last night Referee Bud Fisher of Peterboro, handed out six penalties in all, four of them to the Rovers, which was the best player the Peterboro Auburns to the tune of 32 to 15 in a wild free scoring game. TARZAN THE MAGNIFICENT

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

For the first time Woora had met a man who did not tremble in his presence. Woora was nonplussed for he reputed powers depended largely on the fear he inspired. But he dared not reveal his confusion to his people, who believed him master of men and Gemora.

Masking his dilemma with a confident grin, Woora demanded: "How is my brother Mafka—that thief, that ingrate, that murderer, that prince of liars?" "I do not know him," Tarzan answered. "What!" cried Woora, "you a Kali and you do not know Mafka?"

"I am no Kali, and I did not come through their land. I came by way of the mountains and the gorges. "You lie," shrieked Woora, "no man living could cross those mountains, and there is no other access to our land except through the country of the Kali."

Woora tightened his hand on the great emerald as if he were in the throes of inspiration. "No, I see it all!" he shrieked; "you are the Kali, but you are in the service of my brother. He sent you here to kill me. But it is you, stranger, who will die, not I!"

BRITISH AMBASSADOR TO CHINA IS WOUNDED

Travelling to Shanghai When Struck by Bullet From Japanese Airship

Blood Transfusion Given at Shanghai as Minister is Weak

LIFE NOT IN DANGER

Japanese Express Regret, Say Car Not Sufficiently Identified

Shanghai, Aug. 26 (CP-Havas)—Sir Hughe Knatchbull-Hugessen, the British Ambassador to China, was gravely wounded by a machine-gun fired from Japanese aircraft near Wusih today while enroute by car from Nanking to Shanghai.

Taken to a Shanghai hospital, the envoy was too feeble to undergo an operation for the extraction of the bullet. He was given a blood transfusion. His life was not in danger.

An official communique issued by the British authorities placed full responsibility on the Japanese for the incident.

Japanese Regret Expressed.

Japanese naval authorities expressed regret over the incident but said the British flag floating from the radiator of the ambassador's car was not sufficient identification.

They claimed the ambassador's car was on a strategic road in time of war and could easily have been taken for a Chinese staff car. A Union Jack painted on the roof of the car might have afforded a greater degree of protection, they added.

The planes were identified as Japanese by Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Lovell-Fraser, British military attache, who was with Sir Hughe. He was knocked unconscious by the concussion of a bomb that fell in a neighboring field a few minutes after the planes strafed their car.

Attacked in Ten Bombers

The automobile in which the ambassador was riding from Nanking to Shanghai was attacked by ten Japanese bombers near Changhai. He was wounded by spraying machine gun bullets and was sent to a Shanghai hospital.

The wounding of the British ambassador was the second international development of the day.

Japanese naval authorities threatened to include foreign shipping in the 800-mile blockade established along China's coast to bolster the Japanese operations around Shanghai.

On Tokyo Premier Fumimaro Konoye declared Japan considered British and United States efforts to halt fighting in the Shanghai area as of little importance.

Had Noted Career.

Sir Hughe hurried from Shanghai to Nanking aboard the Nanking, a 1,000-ton river steamer Wednesday but July 14 in an effort to forestall the spread of hostilities between the two Oriental powers.

The 51-year-old diplomat has been ambassador to China since 1935 when he was transferred from his post as minister to Iran. He had previously served as Minister to the United States and as Counsellor of Embassy at Brussels.

Sir Hughe is a first cousin of Senator Hugessen Knatchbull-Hugessen, of Montreal. The former's father, Rev. R. J. Knatchbull-Hugessen, was a younger brother of the first Lord Brabourne, the Canadian senator's cousin.

Sir Hughe was accompanied by Lieut.-Colonel W. A. Lovat-Fraser, British military attache, who was also wounded.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Shooting stars and the aurora of August 11 was the night for shooting stars as the earth at that time was passing the orbit of a meteor-swarm which was crossing its regular path around the sun. But what connection have meteors with the weather? Only a very negligible one. They do, however, fall in the path of the proximate height of the atmosphere by their bright trails, which are caused by the friction of the air heating them to incandescence. Two or more observers some distance apart can observe them and calculate their height. That average height is 68 miles, on occasions they have been observed much higher, about 125 miles. Air, then, must extend even high-er than that.

Ambassador May Die, Back Broken by Bullet

Shanghai, Aug. 26 (CP)—Surgeons tonight said Sir Hughe Knatchbull-Hugessen, British Ambassador to China, shot by Japanese airplane while motoring from Nanking to Shanghai this morning, might not recover.

They said a machine-gun bullet had broken the ambassador's back but had left the spinal cord intact. They said his condition was extremely critical.

Sir Hughe was caught in a hail of machine-gun fire as he stepped from his official motorcar flying the Union Jack, to see why Japanese planes were flying overhead.

JIMMIE MATTERN RETURNS TO U.S.

Plane Used in Search Not Equipped For Arctic Flying

Fairbanks, Alaska, Aug. 26 (AP)—Pilot Jimmie Mattern, who started to return to the United States today while two planes cruised the Arctic in search of six Soviet transport fliers.

Another searching party in the huge flying boat commanded by Sir Hubert Wilkins and piloted by Herbert Hollick-Kenyon of Toronto rested at Coppermine, after a 16-hour flight over ice choked Arctic seas. One spy was made at Walker Inlet on Prince Patrick Island, 800 miles northeast of Coppermine.

The Arctic searchers reported travelling some 1,500 miles yesterday over the Beaufort Sea, to the 62nd parallel and to Prince Patrick without finding a trace of Sigismund Levanefsky and his companions who disappeared Aug. 13 on a projected flight from Moscow to Fairbanks enroute to Oakland, Calif.

Mattern withdrew because his plane was not equipped for arctic flying. He had joined the hunt in hopes of repaying Levanefsky for saving his life in Siberia four years ago.

Canadian pilot Bob Randall left Barrow, northernmost Alaska settlement, Wednesday to carry a second message, contents of which were not revealed, to Soviet Pilot Zadkoff.

Randall flew 460 miles along the Alaskan coast from Barrow to Aklavik, N.W.T., passing over Zadkoff's grounded plane 200 miles east of Barrow. His radio dig not say whether he dropped the message by parachute.

Randall reported Zadkoff had landed to await more favorable weather.

WALK OUT SECOND TIME

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 26.—(CP)—Idle to work for the second days after a five-week strike, 1,700 workers at the three Cornwall plants of Canada Cotton, Limited, resumed work at the Mills today for the second time and stopped production.

The walk-out was not authorized by the United Textile Union, officials insisted and they expressed concern in view of an agreement reached last week to end the initial strike.

2,000 Rifles Must be Given Up By Tribesmen of Fakir of Ipi

Peace Terms Received Calmly at Tribal Meeting

NO ACTUAL TREATY

Simla, Aug. 26 (CP Cable)—The Government of India announced today that under the peace terms 2,000 rifles must be given up by the rebellious Waziristan tribesmen the followers of the Fakir of Ipi will be required to pay Rs. 2,000 rifles and pay fines totalling £6,000 (£29,586).

Tribal gatherings are being held in various parts of the northwest frontier region where the terms have been communicated to the tribesmen by Lieut.-Colonel C. R. John Coleridge. Thus far the tribes have received the peace terms calmly.

Hostilities ceased some weeks ago although there has been no actual peace treaty. The Government plans to build roads in Waziristan and generally to improve the country the Wazir and other tribes.

The prolonged fighting resulted in 13 British officers killed, 15 wounded; four Indian officers killed, 55 wounded; four Indian officers killed, 11 wounded; and 139 Indian soldiers killed. Enemy casualties were not estimated. The British forces were made up of 52,000 regular troops and 5,000 irregulars.

One of the officers engaged in the campaign was Colonel (temporary Brigadier) Frederick H. Maynard of Ottawa, a veteran of operations in the Northwest Frontier Province. He is in command of the Bannu Brigade.

FINDER OF BODY HELD FOR MURDER OF RENFREW GIRL

John Comba, 25 And Unemployed Remanded Till Sept. 1

TELLS OF DISCOVERY

13 Year Old Girl Criminally Assaulted Says Dr. Frankish

Renfrew, Ont., Aug. 26 (CP)—The three weeks search for the slayer of 13-year-old Ethel Hodderwick, whose body was found on the outskirts of Renfrew on August 3, was climaxed yesterday by arrest of John Comba, 25, unemployed citizen of the town who had pleaded a search party to the spot where the young girl's body was discovered. A charge of murder was laid against Comba and Coroner of the Peace Arthur J. Devine remanded him until September 1.

The girl's body was found in a secluded spot, off the road, in the section known as Caswell's Hill, about a mile out of Renfrew on the night of August 3. She had gone there to pick choke cherries.

It was dark when a party, led by Police Chief Moss Greer, was directed to the girl's body by the cries of Comba, one of the searchers. Her skull was fractured; there were numerous abrasions on her body, and she had been criminally assaulted, according to Dr. E. R. Frankish, medico-legal expert.

Questioned by the time how he had come across the corpse of the murdered child, Comba said:

"After travelling for some distance I came to the creek. My hand slid over something, and I knew at once it was a body. I started shouting after I got up. It was dark. Greer was not far away. I could not say anything as it was dark, but soon a few of the other searchers had come over and with the aid of their flashlights we saw a terrible sight. I still think about it, and can hardly eat."

PLANE BOMBS BRITISH TANKER

Five Bombs Dropped Near Tanker, Miss Vessel

London, Aug. 26 (CP)—A Reuters News Agency dispatch from Athens today said an unidentified airplane twenty miles off Barcelona had attacked a British tanker, the Woodford, Greek company.

Five bombs of the vessel told of the attack on its arrival at the Piraeus this morning. The ship was identified as the "Woodford" and a vessel of that name is listed in Lloyd's register.

The plane was said to have dropped the bombs near the tanker without hitting it.

The British government meanwhile lodged a formal protest against the bombardment of the British freighter Noemijulia off Corsica Monday.

The government warned France that the attack on a British merchant ship occurred it would take action "as the circumstances shall require".

Occupation of Fallen Basque Capital Is Imminent

And Where are You Going, My Pretty Maid?

"I'm Going to the Belleville Fair She Said."

Belleville Fair 1937

Belleville Fair, 1937 Model,-Opens Next Tuesday, Continuing Wednesday, September 1; Thursday, September 2; Friday, September 3.

Belleville Fair has gained a wide reputation for being worth while and people travel long distances to attend. In fact it has been said that Belleville Fair is better known and appreciated one hundred miles from Belleville than closer home. Be that as it may, Belleville Fair is blessed with a devoted band of workers who aim to place this Exhibition on the highest plane possible—men and women with vision who remember that the Canadian National Exhibition developed from Toronto Fair. All through the years of depressed business conditions, commonly called that ugly name "Depression," the moving spirits of Belleville Fair have kept doggedly on, not yielding to discouragement, unmoved while other agricultural exhibitions folded up and disappeared from view, each year trying to improve and lay firm and true foundations for a brilliant future. This year's fair is the culmination of years of faithful and hard work and patrons will find the exhibits finer and more numerous with every branch of agricultural life represented, as well as the various industries of the Bay of Quinte district,—the activities of the entire district being placed on review. Many new and attractive features have also been provided in order that patrons may enjoy every minute of their stay at Belleville Fair, day and night.

While Belleville Fair represents the whole Bay of Quinte District the city of Belleville has a large stake in the enterprise having provided modern and beautiful grounds and buildings at a cost of many thousands of dollars. This gives the citizens of Belleville an added interest, a financial interest, which should enroll every citizen of this city into an active worker for the success of Belleville Fair. It's easy to criticize but for heaven's sake let us practice constructive criticism which is helpful, instead of all-too ready destructive criticism which leaps so easily to the mouths of side-line critics who offer no helpful suggestions but seek to hamper progressiveness by carping criticism. If we cannot help, let us not hinder. Belleville Fair is a civic asset, an integral asset in the building up a greater Belleville, interesting as it does thousands of people for many miles around and focussing their attention upon this city as a business centre with no competition between Toronto and Montreal. Let's all get together, City and Country and make Belleville Fair the greatest fair of its kind in the Dominion—when we've accomplished that we can take in more territory.

May the 1937 Belleville Fair be the best in every way of the entire life of this exhibition which has functioned for many years and will function for many more, even unto the next generation, without doubt.

CITIZENS OF BELLEVILLE do your part—let the merchants put out their sidewalk flags, make their attractive and additionally attractive in honor of the fair visitors who will be our guests next week. Householders should have their attractive home premises made more attractive if possible, and put out flags and bunting in honor of the strangers, or rather neighbors, within our gates. The City Council and Public Works Department will, no doubt, have the city streets looking spick and span and everything made bright and cheerful in honor of the visiting neighbors.

Let every flog and piece of bunting be put out Monday and remain up for the duration of the Fair—is a suggestion worthy of consideration.

LET BELLEVILLE WELCOME FAIR VISITORS IN A RIGHT ROYAL WAY.

ALLEGED SLAYER TORONTO WOMAN FOUND IN DEBRIS

Mrs. G. Buck Intercedes in Family Quarrel And Stabbed in Abdomen

COTTAGE SET AFIRE

Police Believe Hamilton, Slayer of Woman, Shot Himself

Manbert, Ont., Aug. 26 (CP) — Charred body of William J. Hamilton, alleged slayer of Georgia Buck, was found in the ruins of a fire-destroyed tourist camp cottage here today. The knife with which police said he had fatally stabbed the Toronto woman lay beside the body but how the man died was not immediately determined.

Identification of the remains was made positive by the set of teeth. The 35-year-old Parry Sound butcher was last seen at 7 o'clock night yesterday to interview his wife, whom he had estranged.

Stabbed In Abdomen

Mrs. Buck was stabbed in the abdomen by a 16-inch butcher knife taken from the kitchen shop in Parry Sound in which Hamilton had been employed. It was said she intervened in an altercation between Hamilton and his wife, who operates a tourist camp under the name of a former husband, a Mr. Hamilton.

The stabbing occurred yesterday. Hamilton was said by police to have set the summer cottage afire after the alleged murder. Mrs. Buck, stabbed to death, was rescued from the flames by Mrs. Hamilton and her adopted daughter and it was first thought Hamilton had fled the dense bush surrounding the settlement.

How Hamilton died could not be learned until Coroner Dr. S. B. Stehn of Parry Sound, who went to the scene said performed an unsuccessful operation upon Mrs. Buck last night, had made an examination. It was possible the man had been shot for it was known two rifles belonging to the owners of the cottage were in the building.

Died in Station

Mrs. Buck was moved by boat the 300 yards from the cottage to Manbert Station. The wife of a Toronto railway employee, she died in the station before a train arrived to take her to a Parry Sound hospital.

Authorize Strike Of U. S. Railwaymen In '5 Brotherhoods

Cleveland, Aug. 26 (AP)—A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, announced today that committees representing five railway brotherhoods had authorized a strike for Sept. 8 to support demands for a general 30 per cent wage increase.

Whitney, chief of the committees, carrying on negotiations at Chicago, at 5 a.m. of Sept. 8 the switchmen's members of the brotherhoods to begin leaving their jobs.

The organizations involved, he added, are the trainmen, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and Firemen, the Switchmen's Union of North America and the Order of Railway Conductors.

The membership of the groups totals approximately 250,000 men, Whitney said.

Louis - Farr Bout Off Till Monday On Account Rain

New York, Aug. 26 (AP) — The heavyweight championship fight between Joe Louis and Tommy Farr, scheduled for tonight, was postponed until Monday night because of rain.

The Four-day postponement was announced by Promoter Mike Jacobs shortly after the rival fighters weighed in at the office of the State Athletic Commission.

The Welsh challenger had a nine pound advantage on the scales, weighing 197 to 188 for Louis.

Because of the length of the postponement, the fighters will be obliged to go through the official weighing-in and examination ceremony again, on Monday.

Drinking Rain.

A drinking rain, with no signs of letup by tonight or encouraging reports as to tomorrow's weather, prompted Jacobs to defer the title match.

Another factor, presumably, was that the advance ticket sale has been disappointing. The promoter hoped the additional time would develop sufficient interest to make the bout a financial success.

The boxers stripped within a few feet of each other when the medical examination without exchanging a word. As Louis stepped off the scales, he shook out his hand and said to the challenger: "How are you?" Farr replied: "Very good." That was the extent of their conversation.

Both fighters decided to return to their camps.

12-TON TRAILER IS DEMOLISHED

Driver of Transport And Companion Escape at Cobourg Crossing

Cobourg, Ont., Aug. 27.—(CP)—Struck by the eastbound Canadian National Railways freight train today, a 12-ton trailer of the Motorways Transport was demolished. The driver, Jack Travers, Hamilton, and a companion, Norman Willmore, escaped injury when the tractor of the truck crawled over tracks before the train struck.

The driver told police he was at the level crossing and stopped to let a westbound freight pass. A truck ahead of him started up and he concluded the way was clear and followed suit.

"Just then I heard the whistle of an eastbound freight", Travers said. "The truck ahead of me cleared the track and I gave my truck the gun. I cleared the caboose with the tractor but the train hit the trailer."

The trailer chassis was carried 200 yards and the contents, 11 tons of groceries, were strewn over two acres. The train was slightly damaged. Police Chief Wm. Hayes and Constable Gavin Reid investigated.

BULLET FOUND IN SPARE TIRE CASE

Hamilton, Aug. 26 (CP) — Discovery of a revolver bullet that pierced the spare tire cover on the rear of a car stolen last midnight and later abandoned in Dundurn Park, furnished a mystery for police today.

Joseph Murray reported a car owned by the Wright Fruit Company had been stolen. Later police were furnished with a description but no trace of the stolen car was found until early today when constables Stan Edge and Hamish McGee saw it parked in Dundurn Park.

A bullet hole was found in the cover of the spare tire on the rear. The constables removed the cover and found the slug lying inside. It had flattened against the rim of the spare wheel.

FATE OF SPAIN MAY BE DECIDED AT SANTANDER

Vanguard of Franco's Force Ready to Enter Formally

25,000 CAUGHT IN NET

Tales of Anarchist Terror Within City Told

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 26.—(AP)—Vanguard columns of General Francisco Franco's victorious northern army gathered at the gates of Santander today to execute an official occupation of the important provincial capital.

Detachments numbering several thousand already had penetrated the city to quell vengeful Terrorists.

Insurgent sources estimated that about half of the Spanish - Government's defeated army of some 50,000 was caught in a 15-mile-square trap in the rolling country southeast of Santander, still unaware that "the City of Perpetual Spring" had capitulated.

Swift Thrusts

The defence of the Biscayan Seaport had been shattered by twelve days of swift thrusts—a defeat that may decide Spain's thirteen-months-old civil conflict.

Tales of anarchist terror in the conquered city, of thirst and hunger, of pillage and shooting in the streets reached the French shores of the Bay of Biscay.

Fleeing men, women and children streamed into France on any craft that could carry human cargo on water. The sea was the only exit from Santander.

Encircling Continues

While Franco's advance guard waited today for the columns to occupy Santander, supporting columns occupied Ramales and Amputero to the southeast and northeast flanks of the government army that had not already surrendered or fled in the west before the insurgents plugged the route to Oviedo Province.

Reports that the insurgent Basque militiamen had surrendered in Santander, insurgent headquarters said.

SCHOOLS REOPEN HERE ON SEPT. 1ST

This Will be Opening Date Unless in Case of Emergency

"The schools of Belleville will commence the autumn term as scheduled by law, namely on September 1st, unless something unforeseen happens between now and that date," announced H. J. Allin, chairman of the Belleville Board of Education when questioned relative to the matter by the Ontario Intelligencer today.

There are no cases of infantile paralysis in the city it is learned.

When members of the Board of Education interviewed School Inspector H. J. Clarke, yesterday, it was the unanimous decision of the meeting that it was folly owing to the extensive change in the curriculum to be introduced in our schools this coming year, it would be inadvisable to postpone the opening of school unless necessary," explained Chairman Allin.

"Then, also, there is the matter of the government grant to our schools to be taken into consideration. Unless our School Board or Medical Health officials can show sufficient reason why we should not open on September 1st, we should keep our schools open as there are opening schools in such places as Hamilton, Peterboro and Brockville on September 1st, also," added Mr. Allin.

Lavish Display of Money Causes Arrest of Trio

R.C.M.P. Express Belief Cheque-Passing Racket Uncovered

FORGERY CHARGED

Yorkton, Sask., Aug. 26 (CP) — Lavish display of money by three Alberta men at Devil's Lake, 36 miles north of here, resulted in their arrest by Royal Canadian Mounted Police who expressed belief today they had uncovered a cheque-passing racket which victimized farmers and storekeepers in the Devil's Lake district.

David McCreary and John Douglas, 32, and August Willing, 37, were arrested and taken to Dauphin, Man., where they face charges of forgery and uttering.

R.C.M.P. officers alleged the men, purporting to be harvesters, arrived here Sunday, spent $40 to airplane rides and agreed to have an unending supply of cash.

TOMATOES AT BLOOMING IN SEVENTY ONE DAYS

Something of a record since tomato production began was established by George Aulthouse, Prince Edward County farmer, who recently picked two hundred and fifty bushels from his ten acre field, that seventy-one days after planting.

Planting between the sixth and eighth days of June, Aulthouse harvested his first tomatoes on the 16th of August.

ELECTRIC RAZOR ONLY ONE AVAILABLE

Modern science is not all that it is cracked up to be, at least so far as its aids to men are concerned when he decides to spend his vacation in a far-off cottage. The other day a tourist from one of the large American centres arrived at one of the far-flung lakes of the north country completely equipped with modern appliances. All went well until the hirsute adornment began to spread itself over his face.

He made all preparations for the removing of his whiskers and put his brand new electric razor, heated water, procured towel and what-not and he lathered his face. "This is the life, he chortled as he rubbed the lather in his whiskers.

Then reaching for the razor, he received a shock. A look of dismay came over his face. There was no electricity available. Now he is undecided as to whether he should buy a "real power" razor or let the whiskers grow.

BANCROFT HAVING A FINE SEASON

Bancroft and the surrounding districts are experiencing fine weather, according to history, visitors returning from that part of the county report. Hosts of the village are at a premium while rooms at boarding houses and hotels are filled. Cottages on the shores of the many lakes of the district are filled to capacity and there is no let-up in applications for the next month, it is said.

Fishing in the district is reported as being good with many large catches of bass falling to the lures of the visitors.

FAMILY TABBY HELPS TO REAR SILVER FOX

Some time ago the family cat of Bruce Arnold, resident of Westport came to the rescue of her master, who owns a fox farm in that district. A baby silver fox, which apparently was a foundling as well as it should have been, was turned over to the maternal care of the cat. Tabby mothered it and took as much care of it as she did of her own kittens. She has now grown into a handsome and

WELL-BROKEN OX HITCHED TO CART

Oldtimers of Verona, Ont., gasped in surprise last Saturday and rubbed their eyes in amazement when they saw coming down the street an old vehicle drawn by a plodding ox. The vehicle, a four-wheeled affair was constructed from the running gear of a discarded automobile. The ox was well-broken and was guided by a pair of leather reins.

TWO BEQUESTS FOR PICTON HOSPITAL

Officials of the Prince Edward County Hospital at Picton are in receipt of the information that two generous bequests have been left to the institution. The late Dr. Lorne Gibson, who died in London, Ont., two months ago left a legacy of $2,000 while the late E. O. Metcalf, former prominent Deseronto citizen, left a survivorship bequest of an unstated amount.

Cantaloupe, Melons In Profusion Today

Lovers of cantaloupe and watermelon found conditions to their particular liking this morning when an avalanche of the luscious fruit descended on the city market in a variety of sizes and weights.

Cantaloupe predominated the melon display with some fine specimens from the West Lake district of Prince Edward County, and parts of Hastings being offered at prices ranging from five to thirty cents each. Watermelon in varying sizes also found a ready market being quoted from ten to forty cents each.

Fresh domestic and imported fruits which highlighted the market display today maintained a fairly level range of prices. Cooking pears, the first of the season were offered at fifty-five cents the basket with imported peaches in different grades of quality and size selling at from forty-five to sixty cents per basket. Burbank plums and green pears were plentiful and were quoted at thirty, thirty-five and forty cents per basket. Crab apples sold at twenty cents the peck with some blackberries going at ten cents per box. No raspberries were available.

Tomatoes showed decline in price with bushel lots quoted fifty and sixty cents each. Smaller lots were offered at twenty cents. Potatoes in bushel lots were offered at seventy-five cents with peck lots quoted at twenty cents. BROTHERS MEET AFTER 34 YEARS

Members of Scott Family Gather at Cherry Valley

Lewis A. Scott of Syracuse, N.Y., Mr. and Mrs. Milton R. Scott and daughter Virginia, of Washington, D.C., and Mr. and Mrs. Howard R. and Scott, of Alexandria Bay, N.Y., were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. William T. Scott of Cherry Valley, Ontario. On Sunday they were the honor guests of Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. Scott at Belleville, Ontario.

Sunday morning the four brothers Charles, William, Lewis and Howard Scott were all together for a few hours, the first time that this has occurred in approximately thirty-four years, it being that length of time since the brothers met at the home of Howard Scott at Alexandria Bay, N.Y.

The brothers were all born at Cherry Valley, the sons of the late Charles and Catherine Scott. Howard moving to the United States 47 years ago, when 13 years of age, and Lewis moving to the same country 43 years ago when a short distance from 20 years of age.

Milton Scott, the youngest son of Lewis A. Scott is employed in the United States' Government service as an expert accountant of the Forestry Service and has been for several years.

ELECTION BOARD MEETS IN CITY

His Honor Judge Deroche Will Preside Over Court Revision

Dates for the revision of the Voters' Lists of the ridings of East and West Hastings were set today at a meeting of the members of the Election Board of the County of Hastings held in the Court House.

His Honor Judge George Deroche was appointed Chairman of the Board. Other members are Messrs. R. C. Donnan, K.C., County Crown Attorney; W. C. Mikel, K.C., local master; J. D. O'Flynn, local registrar, and R. J. S. Dewar, Registrar of Deeds. Members of the Board do not vote in the coming general election.

Judge Deroche will preside over sittings of the Court of Revision at various places throughout the county while W. C. Mikel will conduct similar courts in the City of Belleville.

Dates of revision of the lists and of the various sittings of the Courts of Revision will be announced in the press at a later date.

No Infantile Paralysis Cases Here Says M.O.H. Warning of Symptoms

Dr. G. S. Cronk, City Medical Officer, issued the following statement today on the infantile paralysis epidemic in parts of Ontario:

"Attention of the people of the city is called to the prevalence of infantile paralysis in other parts of the province, and while we have no cases here and hope that we will not have any, we should be on the watch for any unexplained sickness especially in children, so that proper treatment may be carried out early, as it is only by early treatment that we can prevent paralysis."

"Unfortunately, we have no immunizing agent against this disease as in the case of diphtheria. Briefly, the symptoms are:—

Temperature, vomiting in some cases, extreme prostration, pain and stiffness in the back and in the back of the neck, and usually severe headaches."

"It is after the acute symptoms subside that signs of paralysis appear and then it is late for treatment to be effective."

Merchants Use Every Art In Improvement of Exhibition

Booths Year After Year Are Index of Artist Merchant Minds

BOOTHS ARE MECCA

"Competition is the life of trade" is an old maxim and while this may be perfectly true in every sense of the word, perhaps the merchants of Belleville are in exemplification of the spirit of friendly rivalry. Known throughout the province for their fair dealings and quality of merchandise, the business men of this city take a justifiable pride in the exhibition of their goods in the Merchants' Building at the Belleville Fair every year.

Pride not only in their stocks but in the city and its Agricultural Exhibition have prompted these merchants to vie-vie for the most patrons who attend the fall classic every year, an exhibit that runs second to none in this part of Ontario. Originality of design, and a knowledge of display on the part of these live-wire residents of Belleville culminates in an exhibition that is outstanding for its general attractiveness, color and advertising value.

No Expense Spared

These men spare no expense to make their particular department of the Fair one long remembered by those who view it. Days and hours of hard work are put in before the finished display is ready for the keen scrutiny of the public. Designed with originality and in a colorful display, the wares of the majority of the business men and products of the city, are placed before the public in a manner that cannot help but please.

And this year is no different in that respect from former years, that is, in the number of exhibitors. But with the partial return of prosperity, people are spending money in a manner not heard of in the past few years, in fact since the darkest days of the depression and with the public demanding and paying for quality rather than quantity, merchants have adopted themselves to the change in the economic situation and will produce one of the finest exhibitions of merchandise ever seen at the local Fair.

The Merchants' Building will be the mecca of thousands of people during the four days of the Fair.

Feminine Exhibitors Prepare For Close Competition at Fair; Unparalleled Display Foreseen

Field of Woman's Work Given Fine Demonstration at Belleville

RANGE OF EXHIBITS

Busy fingers are putting the last dainty stitches in embroidery work, applying the last bit of paint to beautifully designed paintings of all kinds, completing handiwork of every kind and generally preparing to make their department at Belleville Fair, an outstanding feature of the fair's exhibition.

Annually visitors to this section marvel at the skill and ingenuity shown in the hundreds of entries which are found in the various classes of Ladies' Work Section, who may imagine that the art of needlework is a lost one are agreesably surprised to find that it is flourishing season after season.

The exhibits include useful articles as well as the purely ornamental and are divided into such classes as living room accessories, dining room accessories in variety of colored linens, bedroom accessories, wearing apparel and miscellaneous.

Bed spreads and quilts in the bedroom accessories usually form a striking part of the display and are unique creations in this class. Under miscellaneous come all manner of fascinating needlecraft....Italian cross-stitching, cut work, drawn thread work, petit point, hearth rugs. Further labor-saving devices and best home-patented article for the kitchen, prizes are also given.

For wearing apparel, new styles, new designs and new handiwork are called for, and the visitor can be prepared for many surprises in useful ideas, in infants' and children's, men's and women's wear.

Talents Increased

The entire display appeals intensely to the feminine fair visitor who is inspired to turn her talents to such delicate and worthwhile hobby.

Those who devote their leisure hours to some phase of fine arts and handicraft will be particularly interested in the Fair's display of the exhibits of those competing for prizes in this line. The display is usually featured by some very striking and handsomely executed piece of work which arouses keen admiration in all who view it.

Oil paintings and water colors in the conventional style form a major portion of the display but such a departure from the advertising and book or magazine cover designs is included in this class. In the last class, the subject this year is to be "Autumn in Ontario."

China Painting Encouraged

China painting, so popular of late years, is encouraged by the Belleville Fair officials, for many prizes are offered in this particular branch of handiwork.

As a matter of fact, those who have a flair for fine handiwork have an opportunity of winning a prize for such widely diversified hobbies as wood, plasticene, clay or soap carving, etching, basketry, bead work, leather work and many others are represented in this class.

There is one other class at Fair exhibit at which women excel and that is Domestic Science. Hastings County surely can be proud of its excellent cooks, for the delicacies prepared for competition are the finest. Breadmaking is, of course, the principal feature in the quality of the loaves on display is usually the highest. Everything to tempt appetite of the visitor is entered for this particular class, divided in two sections, home-baking and bottled goods. Delectable-looking cakes, pies, biscuits, cookies, salads and meat dishes make a lovely display each year, while the rich colours of the bottled goods, fruits conserves, jams, relishes of every variety and large quantities of canned vegetables give a specially attractive air to this section.

FACTORY, CHURCH AT SELBY BURN

Fire of Unknown Origin is Noticed by Traveller

Smoking smouldering ruins are all that remain today of the fine cheese factory and Anglican Church in the village of Selby, which were totally destroyed by fire between the hours of ten and eleven last night.

Of unknown origin, the fires were discovered by a traveller passing through the village at a late hour. Answering the alarm villagers rushed to the scene of the fires but nothing could be done to save the flames had made such headway that salvage of contents, with the exception of a few articles from the church was impossible. The entire contents of the cheese factory, including a brand new electric motor, which had cost as yet been used was destroyed.

The loss which is a severe one, was partially covered by insurance, it was stated today.

Hepburn Described As People's Friend By Morgan Baker

Sydenham, Ont., Aug. 26.—(CP)—Premier Hepburn was described as "the people's friend" by Morgan Baker, Member of the Legislature for North York, in addressing a Provincial-Addington Liberal rally in this Eastern Ontario town here yesterday. The rally, which was attended by 1,000 people, was held by Colin Campbell, Member of Federal Parliament and Liberal nominee in this riding in the Oct. 5 Ontario election.

Mr. Baker said Premier Hepburn had fulfilled every promise he made in the 1934 campaign. He said Mr. Hepburn "remains the most fearless parliamentarian Ontario ever had." Assailing the record of Conservative Premier Howe, he charged Mr. Rowe voted "to put men in detention camps in the north at 20 cents a day."

The Conservatives had "lied" up to the hilt," he said, "and haven't needed and couldn't be used," making it necessary for the Hepburn administration to cancel Hydro-Electric power supply contracts. He claimed $6,000,000 had been saved Ontario as a result.

"The Premier kept his promise to clean up Hydro," Mr. Baker continued. "He got rid of the $20,000 Galvs and Maguires. (Former Hydro Electric Power Commission executives.) He has retired the bonded indebtedness of the province. He started the hiking of interest and has cleaned up the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway deal, and he retired election in spite of what Mr. Rowe says."

The government had collected $37,000,000 from estates "cleaned" by the Conservatives. Today the representatives of those estates were "handing together to fight the government and escape the succession duties taxes."

Mr. Campbell spoke briefly, asking for support on election day.

POLICE BLOTTER

Complaints that mischievous boys were tramping down the garden products of Sinclair Street resident, while pilfering apples last evening resulted in police investigation. Constable Ellis investigated, but upon his arrival at the scene of the disturbance, no trace of the lads was in evidence. Ordinarily lads seen entering apple trees do not relish entering apple trees do not have objections to youthful lads taking stunning apples, but when garden produce is trampled under foot and destroyed, naturally the owners become chagrined and complain to the police.

Fred Smith, 10 Geddes Street, reported a hit and run motorist to the police last night. Smith was driving his motor vehicle north on Front Street, when another motor vehicle, travelling in the opposite direction, sideswiped the vehicle, damaging the same. The second motorist failed to stop at the scene of the accident and although Mr. Smith could not ascertain the license plate number of the vehicle, a fairly good description of it was supplied by an eye witness and subsequent police investigations are in progress.

No arrests were necessary in Belleville over the half holiday yesterday, leaving the cell block available for the two weary tramps who sought shelter at that place last night.

Chief Clare Hayes, Tweed, requests the assistance of Belleville police in endeavouring to locate an alleged hit and run driver late last night. According to the information relayed by Chief Hayes, a dark coloured sedan struck another motor car at the southern extremity of Tweed with the result that two women sustained injuries. The motor car sought failed to stop at the scene of the accident, but on the contrary accelerated his car and speeded rapidly away. If the culprit is apprehended several charges will result.

THE ANNUAL DISTRICT FAIR

Belleville fair will open in a few days. Much time and labor have been expended along with outlays of money to make this year's exhibition the most outstanding of its history.

Those who patronize the four-day event next week will have every reason to be proud of it and more than satisfied with the exhibition.

Backbone of the fair will of course be as ever and as it should always be the exhibition of the produce of the farms, livestock and articles of household manufactures along with the exhibits in the great dairy industry, and the display of the merchants and manufacturers with interests centred in this entertainment, the midway, the concession row and the race track.

Those however do not exhaust the attractions, for one of the greatest of these is the human element, the crowd which is essential to a fair's success.

Belleville people today with a fine fair are perhaps prone to forget that this city, the capital of the county, might have lost the fair for good unless it had been for wise counsel which prevailed with results in purchase of adequate grounds and the construction of modern buildings and an ideal track. For some years the fair lay dormant and these were years which did not spell the best, though it was true that during this period the value of the fair was realized more and more and out of these years grew the present institution.

To be successful a fair must progress. It must grow. There are all the evidences that the Belleville Exhibition is a growing and increasing institution. To maintain this growth is the duty of everyone who looks to Belleville fair as one of the evidences of a healthy district.

YOUNG TALENT

Discovery of talent in handicraft work such as has been executed during the vacation at the west and east playgrounds in Belleville is a marvel to parents and to those who direct the cause of education here. Boys and girls who little dreamed of their possession of gifts have been highly praised for their work which merits all the praise which has been given them.

Hundreds now know that they have talent along this line and this knowledge will follow them throughout their lives as an assurance, in attacking new problems and issues in life.

Parents who see this fine example of workmanship cannot but feel grateful that this possibility for the revelation of unexpected gifts has been provided their children.

Those who have been in charge of this work during the two summer months and in charge of all other phases of the life on the playgrounds in games and sports, deserve credit for the result of their season's labors.

FUR PRODUCTION UP

Recording its fifth consecutive increase in value, Canada's raw fur production in the 1935-36 season was valued at $14,000,000 compared with $12,843,000 in the preceding season. These totals comprise the values of pelts of fur bearers taken by trappers and those sold from fur farms, the value of the latter representing over one-third of the whole.

Representing about 34 per cent of the total raw fur production of the Dominion the silver fox was far in advance of every other kind with a total value of $4,728,562 compared with $4,348,823 in 1934-35. The number of silver fox pelts produced was 142,814 compared with 120,465. The silver fox is the product almost entirely of the fur farms and, owing to the expansion of the fur farming industry, has shown an increase in pelt production in nearly every season from 1920-21 onward. Following the silver fox in order of importance are the muskrat with 1,630,231 pelts worth $2,148,605 and the mink with 154,279 pelts valued at $1,701,577.

The total number of pelts of all kinds produced during the season 1935-36 was 4,550,996 compared with 4,926,419 in the preceding season. The decrease is due, chiefly, to the smaller numbers of muskrat and squirrel pelts.

While Canada has always been an important source of furs, the raising of wild animals in captivity for their furs is of comparatively recent origin. The practice of trappers in the early days of keeping foxes caught in warm weather alive until their fur was prime gave birth to the modern industry of fur farming. The earliest authentic record of the successful breeding of the fox in captivity was in Prince Edward Island in 1878. The raising of mink on fur farms has also become quite an established business in Canada, and during the season 1935-36 over 30,000 pelts, or approximately one-fifth of the number of mink pelts produced, were supplied by fur farms. Experiments in several other kind of fur-bearers are being made by Canadian fur farmers.

FETTERS

If I could break my fetters,
A happy soul were I,
For I'd wander free over land and sea
To the gates of the morning sky.

My heart would dance with the sunbeams
On the lap of the golden seas,
And I'd doze in the shade of a woodland glade
At the feet of the murmuring trees.

With never a note of sorrow,
And never a weary day,
I would float on the streams as they carry their dreams
To a land that is far away.

And death who lives under the grass-roots
Would wait till my day was done,
Then whisper a word from the song of a bird
And I'd fade with the right of the sun.
Quebec —Frederick George Scott.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF THE DEAF held a convention recently in Chicago, which was unique and interesting. A magazine writer referred to the delegates as "discontented", which met indignant denial and a flood of letters to the magazine, of which the following are examples:

"Far from being a "gloomy" convention it was one of the cheerfullest ones. Whatever "discontent" was manifested was the natural cry of a body of ambitious individuals seeking due recognition from a grudging world that would deny them even opportunities of making a living. Do you know that deafness bearing is less a handicap than is defective technical or clerical knowledge? We suffer not so much from loss of sound as from the wrong and often ignorant attitude entertained by many employers. Please then won't you help correct the erroneous impression of us as 'discontended" 'mute' and 'gloomy'. We are a joyous lot I assure you. Dame Nature has, in her mysterious way, compensated us with a greater degree of sight conception and the ability to concentrate on the job. And oh, yes, we do possess a sufficient sense of humor.

Markus L. Kenner, President National Association of the Deaf, New York City.

James F. Meagher, of the same association writes: There is Balm in Gilead! Your "Discontented Mutes"....hit the bulls-eye with a bang!..... A few of my people queried the head "Discontented". I pointed out the word describes us—in fact describes all civilization—to a T...., So, if any write in criticising you, just say the Illinois member of the N. A. D. publicity committee gave that article his full and free approbation.., Only erratum in article is title "Under pix: "N. A. D.'s kenner and Mute." Cripes, pard, that lady is Mrs. Constance Hasentahl Elmes, hearing daughter of our venerable deaf pastor, married to a hearing man, who was interpreter for convention.

ONE MAN SHOW

A Negro who had joined the army was one day given instructions by his captain. The captain said: "Your work will be to shine my boots, polish the buttons on my uniform, clean my belt, shave me, then see to my horse; which you must groom, and clean the bridle and saddle. Then you are to serve breakfast; after breakfast you clean up everything in the tent, then go to the parade ground and drill for two hours."

"Excuse me," said the Negro, "but is there anyone else in the army?"

TO BE TRUTHFUL

The colored man in a southern town was approached by a labor agent seeking recruits for a construction contract in a nearby state.

"Look here, boy," said the white man. "Would you like to have some nice steady work?"

The dusky one stirred uneasily, where he reclined against the sunny side of a cotton bale.

"Not if I kin get anything else to do," he stated, truthfully.

Mrs. J. M. Denmark and niece, Miss Pauline Walker of Deseronto are the guests of Mrs. Francis Forton, Herchimer Street, and are leaving shortly for Kansas City, where they will join Mrs. Denmark's two sons and brother.

Mr. H. Whalen and Mr. S. Symons went yesterday at the Sand Banks with company with Mr. Symons' three sisters, Mrs. J. Stark, Lindsay; Mrs. J. Marshall, Bridgeburg; Mrs. R. Palen and her friend, Mrs. A. Layer and daughter of Buffalo.

A peculiar accident happened to Mr. D. M. Waters of this city yesterday while travelling in his automobile from Brighton to Trenton. The top of the automobile, which was down, caught fire and was destroyed and the body of the car was somewhat damaged. It is thought that a spark from a passing freight train lodged in the folded top of the car and was the cause of the fire. Mr. Waters is summering at Presqu'ile.

In the baseball match yesterday between the Clothiers and the Printers the former won with the score being 18 to 17. The feature of the game was the playing of Sam Symons.

The Fleet and Stream Club's bay fishing competition yesterday was not a success owing to the high winds which kept the boats took part, and Messrs. Ormond and Tisdale had the largest catch of five fish. Messrs. Day and W. Taylor were second with three fish and they also had the largest bass, 2-1-2 pounds. The next competition will be held on Sept. 8th.

Messrs. Thomas O'Brien and William Ward have returning after a fishing expedition to Moscallonge Bay, caught an 18 pound lunge, several bass and pike.

Mr. J. J. B. Flint is spending a few days at Trenton.

Mrs. William Stock is visiting friends at Toronto.

Mr. J. Kanon of Thomasburg, is the guest of Mr. Charles Rathbone.

Mr. J. J. Hahne is at Kingston on business in connection with the branch store of Haines & Lockett.

Dr. Harry McKeown will leave next week for Collingwood where he will resume his profession.

Mr. William Slninger of the local office of the Dominion Express Company, left this morning for Toronto, where he will have charge of the company's express office at the fair grounds.

Pipes for the waterworks are still arriving.

Square timber is arriving here almost daily over the Midland Railway.

A drain 250 feet in length is being constructed by the corporation on Bettes and Emily Streets in Sleeper Ward, Alfred Surveyor Taylor is overseeing the job.

Albert College will re-open on Sept. 6th. Already more students have applied for quarters than have attended the college during its most successful years. There are 80 sleeping rooms in the building. They are all taken and a large number of students have been billeted at private homes. Prof. W. H. Dyer is the most successful principal the college has had. An addition to the building will be required next year.

The position vacated by Mr. Brown in the Rathbun Company's office here has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Armandy of Brantford.

The steamer Armenia will carry an excursion tomorrow from Trenton and Belleville to Picton. The excursions on this boat this season have been most popular.

Dr. George Wright, principal of High School, has returned to the city for the re-opening of school. He has been spending the summer at Pringer.

Mr. S. F. Armistead, city school teacher, has returned after a trip to the West.

The yearly fees covering the admission of non-residents to the High School have been set as follows: September to Christmas $8.00; Christmas to Easter $5.00; Easter to July $6.00, making the fee for the full year $18.00.

'I HAVE BROUGHT CHEAPER POWER' SAYS HEPBURN
Industry And Labor Board to End Sweat Shops
RIGHTS OF LABOR
Paris, Ont., Aug. 26 (CP)—Premier Hepburn here last night, defending bill legislation to nullify contract between Quebec Power Companies and the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission, when Hon. Earl Rowe, Ontario Conservative leader, was "to dig up with Montreal power interests that if returned to power he would restore the contracts on their former basis."
"If I go down to defeat, I will at least have the satisfaction of having brought cheap power to the people," said Mr. Hepburn. There was no shortage of power in Ontario today and power available for purchase anticipated future requirements, he declared.
Industrial Standards
The Premier spoke to Brant Liberals in convention for the renomination of Hon. Harry Nixon, provincial Secretary, who has represented the riding continuously since 1919. He will be a candidate for the sixth time next October.
Mr. Hepburn said he stood for labor's right to organize and to bargain collectively but was opposed to illegal methods in strikes—methods such as the sit-down strike sponsored by the committee for industrial organization. Mr. Rowe, on the other hand, had supported in the House of Commons Section 98 of the Criminal Code, now repealed, and had thus denied labor's right of assembly.
Section 98 Repealed
(Section 98 of the Criminal Code was enacted in 1919 at the time of the Winnipeg general strike. It dealt with "unlawful" assemblies and organizations chiefly. It was repealed in 1936 by the present Federal Government.)
A mandate from His Government to press collection of succession duties was claimed by Mr. Government, the Premier said. Under investigation were 44 estates and attempts to hinder investigations by court appeals were being made in the hope Conservatives would come to power and end the cases.
"We are going to take a chance on getting the support of the people to enable us to go on with our program of collecting succession duties, of obtaining the revenue for better highways and lower license fees," he said.
The recently-created Ontario Industry and Labor Board would work in harmony with a similar Board in Quebec to keep wages in particular industries on a competitive basis and to end sweat shops in both provinces, he said.

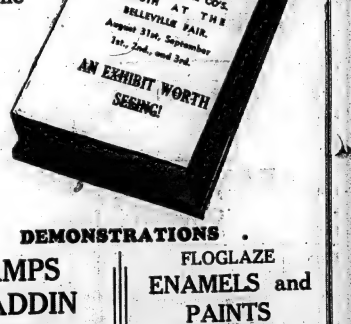
Little Benny's Note Book

Mr and pop was talking a walk before supper and pop said, Love have my son and possible sir, isn't it possible for you to walk in a relatively straight line instead of tripping or stumbling as if convicted of every 30 feet? If I can do it you can do it, in fact if I can do it there's no possible reason, excuse or justification for your not doing it, because I am your age your muscels should have more spring and better reflexes than mine and your joints should be more pliable and under better control, he said.



Sure pop, but G, you've had a lot of years more experience walking than I've had, I said, and pop said, Well, unfortunately I cant help that I'm now years older the casual questioner.

And besides that, pop, if you suddenly tripped over something you'd feel embarrassed as anything at the thought of accidently seeing you, but when I trip I dont have any shame about it and I dont give a darn, so the result is you're much more careful about tripping than I am, I said, and pop said, That also makes a certain amount of cockeyed sense, is that all? he said.

No sir, I said: Tripping is more of a habit with me than what it is with you because I'm all a time tripping and you hardly never are, and you know how much influence habits have on people, I said, and pop said, All in all you make a very good lawyer for yourself, and all I can add in summing up for the plaintiff is to beseech you for Pete sake to be as careful as you can for the remainder of our promenade and at least trip and stumble on your own feet and not mine.

Wich I did.

South Hastings Fall Fair Traced by H. K. Denyes Through Records of 80 Years

Well Known Supporter of Exhibition Writes of Olden Days

PAST FAIR DAYS

Mr. Denyes Indicates How Fairs Have Changed in Many Aspects

Editor, Ontario Intelligencer,—

We have in our possession, old records of agricultural societies and Farmers' Institutes, as far back as 1850 and 60. South Hastings Agricultural Society in the year 1880 had, by its officers and directors, as follows: President, Jas. Brown; 1st Vice, J. J. Farley; 2nd Vice, W. Woods; Directors, Thos. Wills, P. H. Palmer, John Diamond, Geo. Fanning, Elias Vanderwater, Donald Anderson, Monroe Marden, Thos. Wills elected Treasurer Pro Tem. and Samuel D. Farley, Secretary.

The fair was held somewhere on Dundas Street, we are informed.

North Hastings Agricultural Society for the same year, had for its officials: M. Kerr, President; George Boulter, M.D., Vice-President; J. J. Ryan, Secretary; Owen Ketcheson, Treasurer. Fairs were held in the early days at Moira and Luke's Corners. Later there were Township organizations in some of the Townships. Hungerford held fairs at Thomasburg; Tweed's first fair was held at Squire Wm. Sills' in the 8th concession of Huntingdon, and the following year at McKim's Corners.

Some years later there was an East Hastings Society organized and held fairs for several years in Roslin. Thurlow Township held a fair for several years at Thrasher's Corners.

It was considered by those interested, with advice of the Government that it was not to the best interests of the Societies to have so many fairs and as a result the fair which was called the East Hastings Society ceased to hold the fair at Roslin, and chose Thrasher's Corners; the officials of that fair tried hard to make it a success, but were greatly handicapped by lack of funds to build stables and to prepare the grounds to attract the public.

About the same time, the Belleville, or West Hastings Agricultural Society was trying to build up a good fair, but they too, found they had to face some difficulties. The late J. M. Hurley, M.P., was appointed manager; the fair, as I remember it(fifty) assumed a new name, and West Hastings fair symbolized what they should carry on, and held a very successful fair at Frankford. The Belleville fair came to a close up. The East Hastings Society, feeling the fair was not filling the bill, arrangements were made to abandon Thrasher's Corners, and come to the old grounds in Belleville. These grounds looked good to the directors compared with the grounds at Thrasher's Corners.

Fair at Belleville

The new board were some of the old board and additions made from the city an district. Some of the old energetic directors who pushed hard to carry the fair to a success from old East Hastings were the late Messrs. R. G. Herbert, Chas. Weese and Mr. Good Campbell, now Reeve of Dunrronto, and some others.

We started out with new additions to make a success; we had for our Secretary, Mr. R. H. Ketcheson, and we found him a tower of strength to our organization.

We held several good fairs, considering the poor accommodations we had; the race track was the best attraction; we had poor stables, poor accommodations for the merchants to exhibit their goods, no place nor buildings for poultry, nor machinery, and our grounds seemed so multiply; we had to lease the grounds, as had become private property.

The expenses were heavy and gate receipts small. It was hard to interest the citizens of Belleville when there was such poor accommodations for exhibitors. Very few from the city attended the fair and it is not much better to-day. Finally the fair grounds were sold and that ended that Belleville Fairs.

Belleville Fair is now on a sound basis. The City owns the grounds. It has a first-class race track, a fine grand stand, a fine office building, good buildings for all exhibits, one half-mile of stables, good grand-stand and other accommodations, and a very progressive Board. We believe it to be second to none in Eastern Ontario.

Credit is due and are bound to grow with such an exhibition as was put on last year. It was one of the finest exhibits of livestock I ever saw in Eastern Ontario.

Credit to Pioneers

We take off our hats to the pioneers who organized the Agricultural Societies away back in 1850 and 1880 and succeeding years. Their exhibits were few, but the best they had was to be shown.

There was no pedigreed stock in those days; now everything exhibited, has to have a pedigree, even the hens. No expert judges; they were selected from the crowd on fair day, by the Directors and the Secretary. It always took three judges in every class; often the judges on roots and vegetables ended up by judging the watermelons, and it did not take three adults bodied men long to judge a watermelon before they left, as there was no money in judging, just a dinner at the hotel.

Some of the essentials to a good milch cow were: a yellow skin, a long tail, a crumpled horn; cows should be brisk, well-matched in size and color. Cows were plentiful in Hastings in 1858. Hungerford had 1060 cows; Huntingdon, 711; Rawdon, 672; Sidney, 644; Madoc, 683; 4856 cows in seven townships, now there are none.

It is plain to be seen that cows were the chief power in clearing the land and beginning to till the soil; so it is no wonder that good cows were to be admired and exhibited.

There were good horses, too, at the early fairs; all horses shown and driven on a straight piece of road near the grounds; there was usually a good horse race in saddle. The ladies' work was chiefly cloth, made by their own hand; spinning and weaving the yarn into cloth was part of the work done by the pioneer women.

There were no ferris wheels nor midways in the early days, but some of us who still live, have seen a few boring bouts at Roslin and Luke's Corners that would make a Tunney and Dempsey bout look rather tame.

And in 1886, we had good fairs at Stirling, Marmora, Madoc, Tweed, Shannonville and Bancroft. These fairs attract great crowds.

Thank you, Mr. Editor, for all past favors.

H. K. DENYES.

WEDDINGS

POWERS—SHEA

Stirling, August 26—The Church of St. James the Minor, Stirling, was the scene of an attractive wedding at 8.30 o'clock, Tuesday morning, when Anne Mercilla, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Shea, became the bride of Edward Walter Powers of Buffalo, New York, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Powers of St. Clair, Michigan. The nuptial ceremony was performed by Rev. Father R. J. Farrell, P.P. of Stirling, before the altar, beautiful with a profusion of rosecolored gladioli and tall lighted tapers, flanked with potted ferns.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, lovely in a period gown of white doeskin Swiss with large pictures hat of white lace and tulle, carrying a white prayer book marked with white satin streamers and blue forget-me-nots, entered the church to the strains of the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin played by Mr. David Dalrymple, M.A., of South Bend, Ind. Miss Pauline Shea was her sister's bridesmaid, charmingly attired in a pink organza gown with three tiered skirt and wearing a large leghorn hat with pale blue velvet streamers. Her flowers were a shower bouquet of Johanna roses and blue delphinium. Miss Mira Paula June Shea of Belchertown, Mass., niece of the bride, was a winsome little flower girl, a dainty frock of white dotted Swiss with Dutch cap and carrying an old-fashioned nosegay.

The groom was attended by Dr. John T. Shea of Belchertown, Mass., brother of the bride. At the Offertory Miss Patricia Shea of Toronto, sang "The Sweetest Story Heaven" and at the Communion, "Ave Maria", both accompanied by music. Mendelssohn's Wedding March, was rendered as the bridal party left the church. Mr. Neil Shea of Toronto, acted as usher.

The bride's mother chose a gown of black triple sheer with velvet hat and corsage of Premier roses. Mrs. Powers, mother of the groom, was attired in a gown of black crepe with matching hat and shoulder corsage of Ophelia roses.

Immediately following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to some forty guests at the home of the bride's parents. Later the happy couple left amid showers of good wishes for a wedding trip to Montreal and Eastern points, the bride travelling in a tailored suit of knitted grey wool with accessories and silver fox scarf. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Powers will make up residence in Buffalo, New York.

The bride is a graduate of the Millard Filmore Training School for Nurses of Buffalo, New York while the groom is an honour chemistry graduate of Michigan State College, Landing, Michigan.

Numbered among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. E. Powers, Miss Alberta Powers, Mr. Sherwood Powers of St. Clair, Michigan; Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Shea, Miss Marie Wheeler and Mr. Neil Shea of Toronto; Dr. and Mrs. J. Shea of Belchertown, Mass.; Miss Doris Christian of Pitchburg, Mass.; Mr. Lavin Dalrymple of South Bend, Indiana; Miss Evelyn Shea of Buffalo, New York and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. McGuire of Belleville.

FORSYTHE—RYAN

A quiet wedding took place at the Presbyterian Manse, Stirling, at 8.30 o'clock Saturday, August 21st., when Rev. J. A. Kolfend, united in marriage, Nora Ryan, youngest daughter of the late John Ryan and Mrs. Ryan of Marmora, to Donald, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John Forsythe, of Springbrook.

The bride, who was dressed in blue with white accessories was attended by Miss Trenaida Eggleton, of Stirling. Mr. Earle McCann of Bonarlaw, assisted the groom.

Immediately after the ceremony a wedding luncheon was served at the home of the groom's parents. The dining room was prettily decorated in pink and white, with bouquets of pink carnations placed about the room.

The happy couple left on a brief honeymoon for Cornwall and points east amid showers of confetti and best wishes. Upon their return they will reside at Bonarlaw.

HILL—RODGERS

A very pretty wedding was solemnized in St. Andrew's Church, Stirling, on Saturday, August 21st, when Helen Elizabeth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. J. Rodgers, was united in marriage to Charles Davis, son of Mr. Wm. Hill and the late Mrs. Hill of Madoc. The Rev. McConnell officiated at the ceremony. The church was artistically decorated with gladioli.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a white chiffon dress, white velvet hat with nosegay of pink roses and carried a book of Johanna Hill and Betterbilt roses. Miss Jean Rodgers, sister as bridesmaid, wore a blue chiffon, with pink tag and dress and carried a bouquet of Rosedale roses. Susan Simmons, niece of the bride, dressed in pink organdie, made a pretty flower girl. The groom was attended by Mr. Don Whytock, of Madoc.

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, after which the happy couple left by motor for points in Ottawa and through the Adirondacks. They will reside in Toronto.

QUINN—WELLUM

A wedding took place in St. Catherine's Church, Cabbagetown, Toronto, at ten o'clock on Monday morning, when Miss Margaret Anne Wellum, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Wellum, became married to Mr. Gerald Joseph Quinn of Treed, Ont., son of Mrs. Quinn and the late Mr. Quinn. Rev. Father Francis Quinn of Kingston, brother of the groom, assisted by the Very Rev Dean Cullinane of Treed, and the Very Rev. Father Michael Cullinane of St. Catharines, performed the nuptial service before the altar and part of the church were decorated with gladioli.

The bride wore a gown of ivory satin with Chantilly lace, a long tulle veil and carried a bouquet of butterfly roses and baby's breath. Miss Dorothy Patricia Lowther of Toronto, was the maid of honor. Miss Jean Barclay, of Toronto, and Miss June Barclay, the bridesmaids. They wore gowns of moss green over taffeta, with blue velvet trimming. Miss Reid, wore green net trimmed with a darker green velvet and Miss Barclay wore mauve net, with darker mauve velvet. All were head-bands of braided velvet with long veils of net to match the gowns and carried shower bouquets of roses. Little Miss Mary Wellum of Kitchener, was the flower girl and wore a floor-length organdy dress of blue and pink hat and carried a nosegay. Mr. Raphael Rashotte, Mr. George Wellum and Mr. Lawrence Hudson were the groomsman and ushers.

The reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mrs. Wellum received her guests wearing a brown crepe dress, chiffon hat with yellow accessories and the groom's mother, a navy blue dress, her hat gowned in blue and white with blue accessories.

The bride wore a dress of brown and green plaid cord net with green accessories for travelling. Following a motor trip the bride and groom will reside in Treed.

WILDER—HAMILTON

Plainfield—A pretty wedding was solemnized at the United Church Parsonage, on Wednesday afternoon at two o'clock by the Rev. J. F. Everson when Miss Elsie Adella Hamilton, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James William Hamilton of Thurlow Township, became the bride of Ralph David Wilder, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel William Wilder of Rednersville, Prince Edward County.

The bride looked charming in a dress of white triple sheer over white silk with white accessories to match and tulle veil caught with a coronet of orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of bridal roses, baby sinnilas, gladioli, baby's breath and sprigs of white heather, which had just arrived that morning, from Scotland and had been presented by Mrs. Harry McCrea's. Her flowing away dress was Wallis blue, embroidered chiffon over blue silk taffeta and blue hat and purse to match.

Among those present for the ceremony were, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel W. Wilder of Rednersville; Mrs. Alice Moore of Belleville; Mr. Bernard Garbutt, of Rednersville; Mrs. James W. Hamilton, Mrs. Walter Hall, Mrs. Erle S. Denyes, Mrs. Charles Healy, Mrs. Jack Gow, Mrs. Harry McCreary, Mrs. Wilbur Elliott and Miss Annie Hamilton.

The happy couple left for a motor trip to visit friends at Peterboro, Peterboro and other points and upon their return will reside at Plainfield.

ARNOLD FAMILY HOLDS RE-UNION

The Arnold family enjoyed its sixth annual reunion at Oak Lake on Wednesday, August 25. Those present appreciated the delicious dinner which the ladies provided. Campbellford and Belleville were very well represented. Mrs. Jack McKee and her young son, James, travelled all the way from Cleveland to meet the many Canadian relatives. Others from a distance were Arnold Reynolds of Toronto and Mary T. Scott of Pittsburgh, Pa. One of the principal features of the day was the presentation of a shower gift to the bride-to-be, Miss May Hubble of Belleville.

CENTENARY W.A.

Mrs. J. Orr, thing concession of Sidney, invited the members of W.A. to her home for their August meeting. About fifteen members were present, also a number of ladies from town; who came out to enjoy the wonderful dinner, prepared by Mrs. Orr and her assistants. The meeting was called to order by Mrs. Fred Aikens in the absence of the President, Mrs. H. Robin, who was unable to be present owing to illness.

Letters of appreciation for kindness shown them, were read from Mrs. R. Thrasher and Mrs. D. Stinson. The meeting closed with all repeating the Twenty-Third Psalm.

CENTENARY W.M.S.

The August meeting of the W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. J. Orr. In the absence of the President, Mrs. R. Hart, Mrs. W. Hall presided. The minutes of last were read from Mrs. Farnsworth, announcing the great need of more generous contributions to carry on the good work of the W.M.S.

Mrs. J. Kelley group leader then took charge, after the Scripture reading and prayer. Miss Johnson, some discussion following concerning the sending of a delegate to the training school for leaders at Whitby, but no action was taken.

A letter was read from Miss Florence Kite, missionary to Africa, Africa, describing the Coronation celebration in Accra. This was very interesting and amusing. A survey of the work being done in some of the stations there was also included.

The next meeting closed with the Mispah.

Don't Pamper Unpopular Child

If Companions Don't Like Him, First of All, Find Out Why

By LISA GRENELLE

Virginia Hartley was one of those "tiger" mothers, fierce and proud of it. "I'd want to kill anyone who hurt him," she said of her small son. And she meant it.

All of this was quite natural. I thought to myself, at the time. The good old "mother instinct" is a two-edged sword. Our finest thing in this world if controlled and tempered with a little detached common sense, it becomes incapable of returning to injure seriously the very thing it seeks to protect. If not wisely directed, it is a good deal more apt to decapitate its subject than to remove the head of the adversary.

Women who are smugly proud of their fierce desire to protect blindly their children are usually the ones who allow their instincts to run amuck and do their cherished ones harm by making their feelings sinned against (whether they are or not), their every word soft and weak and smug, justifying them in not facing the truth about themselves. In not finding out and adapting themselves to fit conditions.

Not Helpful

To console young Willie and Jane by assuring them that their unpopularity is no fault of theirs, that their persecutors are just a bunch of "second-rate mentes" may prove comforting, but it will hardly improve the situation. Unfriendliness, even from "mentes", makes an uncomfortable atmosphere.

Your darling may indeed be a victim, unconscious and envied against, but even the most pitiful victim is at least somewhat to blame. And while you are powerless to change the enemy, you can perhaps wage a successful war on home division. You can, if you are big and strong and brave enough, jump the hurdles of pride and your natural instinct to go out and kill the enemy, and succeed to say sweetly to yourself, "What is the matter with Willie, that he can't bear about him that would cause others to dislike him? Is he too timid, too arrogant?

"No", you will probably conclude, "Willie's very sensitive and too fine."

Less Sensitive

If he is, he should be made less sensitive, coarsened up a bit. Sensitiveness is not the superior virtue we like to think, but a fault and a handicap like any other.

The way you can help your child the most toward adjustment, popularity and happiness is not by excusing him, but excusing his enemy; not by making his enemy yours, but by reconciling him to his enemy; by trying to see and point out to him his enemy's point of view.

I know it's tempting to simply sympathize, comfort and protect, but it's not constructive. Make the child feel you believe in him, of course; that you are always back of him. But don't start him playing himself; don't start him justifying his own unpopularity. Very kindly try to point out to him what he may have done to offend.

When Child Refuses Meals

(By LISA GRENELLE)

"Dear Miss Grenelle,

"You advocate children not being forced to eat. But supposing their taste is so narrow that they end in living on an unbalanced diet?

"With my children it isn't that they won't eat. The trouble is that they eat the wrong things, or at least not always enough of the vitamin foods, milk, vegetables and salads. They stuff on chocolate cake whenever cook or a chance, eat ice cream, of course, and turkey and roast beef. But often, when have something less exciting, they just pick at their plates, saving up their appetites for something they like better.

"If Father or I nag or insist that they finish what is on their plates before leaving the table, you know what happens. Everything is gulped down, or eaten cold, with plenty of resentment for spice. That method, as you have often said in your column, is not particularly conducive to good digestion.

Nothing Constructive

"On the other hand, I can't see that this leaving the matter rest brings about any definitely reform. At least, leaving my children go hungry doesn't seem to teach them much. They don't seem to mind at all. Or perhaps they don't really go hungry. Maybe they manage to pick up something. If they manage to pick up something, they manage to pick up something. If their own ice box is too well guarded, there's always the ice box or cupboard of a friend. If not chocolate cake, at least, cookies.

"I try to market to suit their taste as well as health, but we can't have pots every day. (The only green vegetable the children like), and the whole thing gets frankly monotonous as well as unbalanced.

Is there no way I can broaden the children's taste and reconcile them to a greater variety of dishes?

"Yours truly,

"Mrs. Smith."

I know of one family who seems to have solved this very same problem. I have faced with it for years myself) very cleverly, conclusively and with a general moral attached.

A revival of georgette is forecast, for next season. At Ascot, a smart woman wore a lovely frock of heavy georgette, in orchid color with heavy bone buttons on the simple bodice. Three-quarter sleeves, rather loose at the cuffs, and wine-colored belt and gloves are other details.

Ample Grounds and Buildings For Purposes of Exhibition Seen as Far Back as 1860

President James Brown in First Year Stressed Need For Accommodations

LONGER FAIR

Names of Exhibitors Who Went Far to Make Success 77 Years Ago

Now far back the annual autumn exhibitions in Belleville go is not clear from newspaper files which have been preserved. There are complete records of fairs in full swing in 1856, and on through the sixties. Only in 1852 the fair was known as the Annual Horse and Cattle Show. In 1860 it was known as the South Hastings Agricultural Exhibition.

Fairs or exhibitions in those days were community events in the fullest sense of the term. A fair was a district event in those days of eighty years ago. Then fairs had their troubles as they do today. Seventy-seven years ago this coming October the fair was held in the "Athenaeum" and the surrounding grounds. An element associated with fairs since their inception because most of them were held in the open played its part in this exhibition, rain. The reporter who went to log the exhibition in 1860 recorded for The Intelligencer the words which signify a great deal even when said today: "Early in the morning it commenced to rain and continued with scarcely an intermission throughout the day. The grounds were in a disagreeable muddy condition which prevented the exhibition display from receiving the attention from visitors its merits demanded." But still the people of later ages those of 1860 did not allow the elements to defeat the purpose of the fair and the interest was greater than in former years.

Accommodations Improved

Fairs have progressed in the matter of grounds. Rains cannot mar altogether fairs today for they are not limited to one day but are held over for four and there is excellent accommodation for every entry and there are spacious halls.

Of course in 1860 the fair was not so large as it is today. There was an attendance of 1500 persons. The total being three or four hundred higher than usual. Today with heavier expenses and larger prize lists, the gate must naturally be much increased. So that today it is the case of thousands attending daily.

Some Familiar Names

Exhibitors who showed at South Hastings Exhibition 77 years ago numbered some names not borne by persons of those parts and others which are familiar in their descendants.

There were exhibits of cattle by Thomas D. Farley of Sidney; Jacob Detlor of Sidney; Mayor Jones of Sidney; Jacob Mott, Thurlow; Benjamin Clapp, Thurlow; Joseph Cannifl, T. Cannifl, Jonas Cannifl, Mr. Woods, of Thurlow; James Wightman of Tyendinaga; J. J. Farley of Thurlow; Joseph W. Var. George Addison of Thurlow; Robert Reed of Thurlow.

Exhibitors of horses included: S. M. Washburn; W. Bennett; R. Bogart; Elijah Ketcheson; G. and J. Brown; H. Pretty; D. Foster; S. Beatty; J. R. Bryenry; W. Detlor Ketcheon Graham; J. Mott; Geo. Addison; S. A. Burpee; D. R. Leaver; Samuel Hall; T. D. Farley; Richard Carscadden; John Gilbert; P. J. Cannifl; Jonas Cannifl; Thrasher; J. J. Farley; R. Peplow; Mr. Woods; Richard Reed; Durlin Clapp; N. Lucas; P. R. Ramsay; J. H. Rowe; W. H. Vanhasel.

Exhibitors

Owners of sheep exhibits were William Woods; Robert Garbutt; H. Pretty; R. Ketcheson; Graham; George Addison; John Cheesborough; W. Wanless; Samuel Hall; Pitt; Alex Thompson; Robert Sills; P. R. Palmer; E. K. Graham; J. N. Diamond.

In swine, the prize-winners were exhibited by: C. A. Cummings; T. Dafoe; P. R. Palmer; Robert Garbutt; George Addison; Robert Starling; John Ross; John Weese; R. B. Bennett.

Among winners in seed competitions were Joseph Foster; J. C. Morden; F. Ketcheson; Jacob Hagerman; Alex. Thompson; A. Vernill; yes; Hiram Tyler; J. J. Alcock; Alex. McLaren; S. Fanning; H. Vandewater; S. H. Hogle; E. Ketcheson; C. J. Brown; D. Fairman; Jacob Denyes; Elijah Ketcheson; Ketcheson; Ketcheson; Chasey; J. C. Reed; C. J. Starling; Robert Garbutt; Robert Reed.

In farm implements, winning exhibitors were G. and J. Brown; B. Delong; Gilbert Cannifl; R. B. Bennett; E. Graham; D. Fairman; Robert Read; Miles Jones; John Ross; David Jones; E. Burrell; D. Hagerdorn; J. Brown; Thomas Jones; Henry Pretty.

Dairy producers were awarded prizes as follows: T. D. Farley; F. Vrooman; C. Denyes and S. D. Farley; F. R. Palmer; Jacob Denyes; D. Fairman.

There were days when an institution known as "Physics" was not unknown and were the evening witness to a successful horse and cattle show or fair. These monuments or performers lasted well down into the twentieth century. There was a torchlight procession as usual in 1860.

Forecast of Future

It was as early as 1860 exhibition that the fair president, James Brown, saw the need of adequate accommodation and grounds and buildings. He foresaw an united counties' exhibition as one of the possible results. He also forecast the day when a fair would be held for two or three days.

Fairs have always attracted progressive men like James Brown of 1860 whose name is not even at this late date forgotten. Such men have led the way to the successful fair of these days when ample grounds and accommodations fill a large share of the requirements of a successful exhibition.

FAIRS DATE BACK FOR MANY YEARS

Institutions Keep Step or Ahead of Modern Progress

The fall fair is not held for the purpose of amusement only; it is advanced to the stage where it has become a great educational institution within the community, as it ought to be. The fall fair of today is recognized as a part of the community in which it is presented and the Belleville Fair is no exception to this established rule. Annually this great enterprise is looked forward to by exhibitors of farm produce, stock, fancy work, dry and modern, merchandise of all manufacture. Thousands of delightful seeing features are today available at the fall fair.

The fall agricultural fair of Canada today is of paramount importance to the agricultural importance of the Dominion as well. It is nearly 300 years since the first census of Canada was taken and the fun at the fair in those days was capitalized round to private celebration, and within the realm of a small community where barter predominated as these autumn gatherings.

Early Fair Records

The first agricultural society on record was in the Niagara Peninsula and as early as 1808 efforts to form a provincial society to govern fall fairs was made. Before the year 1841 fall fairs had been held at York (Toronto), Cobourg, Cornwall, Hope, Perth, Ottawa, Guelph and other Western Ontario centres with some success. It was not until 1846 however, that a fair was held in Toronto, which today is world renowned.

In the early days the attendance at the fall fair was naturally limited, owing to the poor roads of transportation and poor roads. The horse and wagon was the main means of transportation which limited the district from which the fall fair could attract patronage, but today with modern means of conveyance, with improved roads and fast trains, a fall fair can command the attendance and interest of patrons from far and near. In the old days the talent displayed at the fall fair was confined largely to local talent, but today we get world renowned talent appearing at our fall fairs, with the Belleville Fair, which opens today, no exception to the established rule of the day regarding fashion attractions for the entertainment of the annually increasing crowds.

Yes, the annual fall fair of today is part of the community in which it is presented.

POULTRYDOM'S REGAL FOWLS SHOWN AT FAIR

Kings and Queens of Local Poultry Ranges Make Their Bid

COLORFUL ARRAY

One of the most colorful and interesting features of any fall fair is the poultry exhibit and as the Belleville Fair the display of prime poultry have increased until today additional pens are needed to house the increase number of entries in the poultry section, of this great institution, the Belleville Fair which will be opened to the public next Tuesday.

From the stately ornamental birds to the smaller pigeons there is always a kaleidoscopic run of beauty to be seen in the poultry building, which has been newly decorated and added pens placed for the convenience of the exhibitors. Mammoth bronze turkeys and the small game bantams are the paradox of the poultry building while intermediate the patron may see splendid exhibits of the stately Rhode Island Reds, Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Brahmas, Silver Black Hamis, Orpingtons, the snow-white Leghorns and numerous other lines of the poultry family.

Other Fowls

Then there are the water fowl, the waddling ducks and geese. In years past, wild ducks taken into captivity have been added attraction to the poultry building of the Belleville Fair—while in this building also the family pets are displayed on exhibition, rabbits, guinea pigs, pigeons and other pets are permitted a special department in the poultry building.

The poultry class of the Belleville Fair has long since established itself as one of the feature attractions for the patron who attends the fair for the purpose of entertaining for the purpose of farm advancement. To miss the colorful array of poultry at the Belleville Fair would be most regrettable as the study and interest in birds is interesting and educational to the young as well as the old.

1937 YEAR BOOK IS AVAILABLE

Dominion Bureau of Statistics Publishes Comprehensive Volume

The publication of the 1937 edition of the Canada Year Book, published by authorization of the Hon. W. D. Euler, Minister of Trade and Commerce, is announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The Canada Year Book is the official statistical history of the country and contains a thoroughly up-to-date account of the natural resources of the Dominion and their development, the history of the country, the constitution and geography, the different branches of production, trade, transportation, finance, education, etc. It is a comprehensive study within the limits of a single volume of the social and economic condition of the Dominion. This new edition has been thoroughly revised throughout and includes in all its chapters the latest information available up to the date of going to press.

The 1937 Canada Year Book extends to over 1,100 pages, dealing with all phases of the national life in a manner worthy with these susceptible of statistical measurement. A statistical summary of the progress of Canada is included in the introductory matter. This gives a picture in brief of the remarkable progress which the country has made since the first census of the Dominion was taken in 1871, sixty-six years ago.

Attention may be called to some of the more important features of the present volume.

Chapter I, treating of the physiography of the country, has been almost entirely rewritten and a special section on Economic Geology, prepared by W. J. Alcock, Ph.D., Mines and Geology Branch, Department of Mines and Resources, is included. A special article, on "Pamas of Canada", prepared for the Year Book by R. M. Anderson, Ph.D., Chief of the Division of Botany of the National Museum of Canada, appears on pages 20 to 32. The results of the Quinquennial Census of 1936 are included with the treatment of Population in Chapter V, and a special section on "Occupations of the Canadian People" rounds out the treatment of this chapter. Chapter VI, agriculture, appeared mainly in the 1934-35 Year Book but was supplemented by later material in the 1936 Year Book. Agricultural statistics of the subsequent Census are given in Chapter VIII—Agriculture, which also includes a short article on "Agricultural Progress in Canada and the Dominion Experimental Farms System".

The operations of the Bank of Canada are now established in the financial system of the country and it has therefore been considered advisable this year to recast Chapter XXII—Currency and Banking.

The accession of King George VI to the Throne and the Coronation of the new King on May 12 are marked by the reproduction as frontispiece of an official photograph of the ceremony in West-minister Abbey, by official portraits of King George and Queen Elizabeth, and an excerpt from His Majesty's address to his people, delivered after the Coronation on May 12, 1937.

Persons requiring the Year Book may obtain it from the King's Printer, Ottawa, as long as the supply lasts, at the price of $1.50, which covers merely the cost of paper, printing and binding. By a special concession, a limited number of paper-bound copies have been set aside for ministers of religion, bona fide students and school teachers, who may obtain copies at the nominal price of 50 cents each, weighing conditions at aforesaid

Legalization of Sweeps No Concern of Veterans

Timmins, Ont., Aug. 26.—(CP)—Legalization of sweepstakes was not a matter concerning war veterans, the Ontario Command of the Canadian Legion was told by Gen. Alex. Ross, head of the Dominion command, and the ex-servicemen voted down a resolution calling for legalized sweepstakes at the convention's closing session last night.

"We are here primarily to discuss problems relative to the welfare of ex-servicemen and not to dictate to the government concerning its policy on sweepstakes," Gen. Ross said. "The name of the Canadian Legion means something in this country and I would certainly object to seeing it used in connection with any such scheme."

How To Overcome Piles And Rectal Soreness

If you are annoyed with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not neglect the cause or delay in the hope that it will pass away. Any lasting success or painful relief must be based on the principle of removing the cause of the trouble. For this purpose we recommend Pazo Ointment. It relieves pain at once, soothes inflamed parts, and tends to reduce swelling, while its astringent and healing influence relieves the itching and soreness. Pazo Ointment is obtainable at all druggists, and its use is simplified by the Pazo Pile Pipe which is perforated to assure easy and painless application, and is highly recommended by many doctors. Try Pazo Ointment for relief of Piles for Eczema or Rash. Also for Sore Nipples, Chafing and Sunburn. Pleasant to use, easy to feel so quick to relieve such distress.

Kiwanis Defeats Peterboro Second Successive Time in Thrilling Ten Inning Game

Score is 5-4 And Winning Combe Tallied on Wild Pitch

WEEKS STEADY.

Belleville Team to Meet Toronto Champs in Next Round

It will play in the tenth inning that new Vince Gray scamper home with the winning run, gave the Belleville Kiwanis kids a 5 to 4 victory over the Peterboro Rotary and the Eastern Ontario championship in the junior O.B.A.A. playdowns in successive games yesterday at the Fair Grounds. The young Petes knotted the count, four all, in the eighth and go one up in tenth only to have Gray reach third on a hit and fielder's choice and score the million dollar run when Roy Armour, Peterboro shortstop, uncorked a wild pitch, final game Gray across the plate with the winning counter. The Peterboro Rotary juniors were eliminated in defeat while the Belleville Kiwanis kids advanced to the second round of the O.B.A.A. championship playdowns by virtue of their victory.

Keith "Lefty" Weeks, also coach "Pewig" Woodley, choice for mound duty and scorer by a slight shade of odds in the initial frame, when the visiting scored two and again in the tenth. Weeks beat Roy Armour, the visiting moundsman in every department. Weeks' slow breaking curve completely baffled the young Petes at times, although his customary control was lacking. Weeks struck out eleven Peterboro batters to Armour's seven and walked two while Armour passed three. Amongst the two Belleville batsmen, while Weeks conked only one. Weeks let the Peterboro kids down with seven hits, Kelly, diner left fielder being the only visiting batter to garner his share and for a single, double and triple.

Gives Fine Support

The Kiwanis kids gave Weeks fine support, led by Vince Gray, their star second baseman, who accepted six chances faultlessly, including two sensational one-handed pick-ups for ultimate outs, and going on the commencing end of the only two-play double executed by Rotary. Collins teamed well with Gray around the keystone sack, however Thornton, 2e second and Girard behind the plate gave first rate performances of defensive ball for the Belleville Peterboro squad. Eddie Plummer got the receiving nod for the Kiwanis, rose to clinty heights

MAMMOTH HOMER IN 11TH WINS FOR AAJMAA JUNIORS

Defeat Young Ukrainians of Oshawa in First Game of Round 6-4

HEAVY CLOUTING

Smart Fielding by Winners With Adams Leading Parade

A mammoth homer to deep centre with a runner aboard, by Frank "Shamrock" O'Neil sent a capacity crowd of sorrowful fans home in the high glee here on Wednesday night, the AaJmaa juniors, representatives in the Senior "A" playdowns taking a fall out of the National Ukrainians of Oshawa by 6-4 decision in eleven frames, the "million dollar" hit came in the eleventh and broke up a well pitched game by Mike Hupchick. The AaJmaa started it all when they were given a life, struck out by and then took his toe hold and his ball sailed over the centre-fielder's head and the ball game was in the bag. The players was finally mobbed by his teammates, when he crossed the rubber. Carlton was the first batter for Pete Townsend for hurling duty but he was unable to get through the line but lasted till the eighth due to clever fielding by his mates. Ken Adams relieved Townsend, who held the losers to three hits in four innings. Orsanu Orsanu came on and struck out two and issued a free pass. Orsanu Orsanu whiffed three and walked one.

Adams Fielding Star

Hupchick on the other hand handed the winners thirteen whiffs and walked but one. Ken Hrynyck in centre was the hitting star of the game, getting a single, double and five times up. J. Hrynyck, Oppyhany and Hupchick also got two each. Hupchick allowed seven hits in the game with Moon Adams and Ken Hrynyck in charge of fire and Romsky, Amo and Adams at the receiving end. Garnet Adams at third was the fielding star of the pastime, some of his work bordering on the sensational, especially his capture of a line drive in the eighth. Bowdidge Hrynyck played ball behind the plate and worked with the hurlers to good advantage with N. Hrynyck and Oppyhany being the best in the batting line. Both of these teams are very evenly matched and it was a game of pitching and better coaching. It is a toss up, who will win the game in Oshawa on Saturday night. PLA

STONEY LONESOME EARN 12 - 12 TIE

Another Contest Necessary To Decide Mercantile Loop

Trenton, Aug. 26 (Special) The edge, where there's life there's hope, was brought out by the Stoney Lonesome softball club last night, when they came from behind to split a decision with the Trent Ontario team in a vital struggle at the Dayshore diamond last night. The score was 12-12. The contest was staged to decided the winner of the Trenton Mercantile League title in the first darkness interfered in the fifth stanza after an argument over the child' umpire's ruling on a runner coming into home plate out short the playing time. Now it will take another sudden death fixture to decide the holder of the loop silverware for this year.

With a seven run lead everything looked rosy for the Millmen until the fifth frame when the lonely gang's batters connected with Burtt Burtt's offerings for three hits. It happened, that Burtt walked Ken Lonesome men and the three drives brought them over the plate. While in the grittiest days of their rivals command the Lonesome nine staged a thrilling seven run rally in the sixth canto to even the count, and keep their championship in the fight for the Mercantile honours.

Everyone in the crowd that attended the tilt was convinced that the brand of ball supplied by the factory boys this season is superior to the exhibitions they gave last year. Wilbur Ferguson was credited the Cotton Club to 17 hits, Bruce Burtt was burning in the same type of performance and his delivery was nicked for 17 hits by the Lonely swingers. Ferguson Bowler only struck out two batters to Burtt's four as the pair pass in rummer. The loser's finger issued four strolls. Teams Trenton Cotton: Ed. Kennedy, Chalmers, Pilsdall, Hight, A. Dauch, H. Lott, Heaslip. Umpires, C. Ward plate and Leo Coughlin, bases.

When Joe Louis crawls through the ropes to battle Tommy Farr tonight he will be the youngest heavyweight champion ever to defend the title. Although Louis is only recognized as the titleholder on the strength of his knockout win over Braddock duckling his engagement with Max Schmeling last June. At any rate there is enough significance attached to tonight's fight to bring a number of British newspaper reporters all of the way across the blue Atlantic Ocean to cover the Tonypandy Terror's attempt at beating Joe Louis.

Not in recent years has a foreign contender received the ballyhoo Farr has been accorded during the build-up for tonight's fight. True enough all Britishers would like to see the Welshman beat the Brown Bomber, but one cannot permit sentimentality to enter hand and facts. Farr is reputed to be a fast moving heavyweight and is banking on an ability to keep out of the reach of the pile-driver-like blows with which he fleistened so many opponents previously. Farr has a good left hook and can box fairly well with a crouch, which also may puzzle the negro lad, but on paper and from looking over the past records of the two men, one cannot expect Farr to win tonight. Louis has a formidable list of O.K.'s behind him, while Farr's record is made up of impressive, fighters like Larry Gains, Charlie Bellanger and Max Baer quite recently going the route with the Welshman. The fight will go on the air at approximately 8.00 p.m. standard time.

Last night there was reported to be 50 prospective rugby football players out to practice at the R. I. E. C. camp, but in spite of a paucity of opposition from that point this fall. We have been informed that the management of the Flyers' football club has approached Coach Frank Hughes relative to having him assume the coaching duties of the Flyers next season. Reports have made him a tempting financial offer, however, Hughes could not blame Mr. Hughes for accepting remuneration for his coaching, but goodness knows our local club is in no position to meet such demands. Mr. Hughes can in no way be blamed if he accepts, but the Flyers' management will leave their proposition somewhat late, we'd suggest.

Local sport fans were treated to some really fine entertainment at Memorial Park on Wednesday when fans advanced in their hasts for a provincial baseball title by signalizing the Peterboro juniors at the Fair Grounds. Not to be out-done the Aajmaa junior pelladers took the Young Ukrainians, Nationals, of Oshawa, into camp at Coleman Flats in a provincial O.A.S.A. playdown, both games going into extra innings before the issues were settled. By virtue of eliminating the Peterboro kids "Tuffy" Weeks's Kiwanis juniors meet the Toronto champions in the next row, while the Aajmaa kids will be the play in Oshawa, a return game.

Frank O'Neil, son of the once noted Shamrock O'Neil of yesteryear baseball fame in Bevlin was the hero last night. Frank hit home run in the eleventh inning with a real lofty socking over at the flats. Although the Ukrainian kids outhit their "Shamrock" opponents, they ala out around the local kids. Thabelle ville kids used "Lum" Cain and Harold Dracup on the mounds while Mansfield loaned them Hupchick to the Motor City jack. Keeps the boys off the score sheet pre the third until O'Neil blasted his million dollar hit in the eleventh. The return game will be played Saturday Friday. Incidentally theocal kids played a great defensive game throughout the entire game, never faltering.

Although a wild pitch gave the Belleville Kiwanis a 5-4 win in the ninth win over the Peterboro juniors to eliminate the latter, we thoroughly believe Lefty Weeks would have produced... Weeks hit three hits in four times and has given in two runs previously and want bat when pitcher Armour scored the wild hurl, that saw Vince Gray scamper home with the winning counter. Weeks pitched sixty for the Kiwanis and struck out eleven. Although Armour pitched nearly fagged 'em past the local kids, he was touched for 9 hits. Gray stood out as the leading batsman of the game with a trio of Plummer, the local Kiwanis fellow is improving each time out, and Whalen, Amo, Collins and Ronsky Mills. The bonds fielded nicely by the circles in fact we don't think but that Frank would have traded headlines nicely but the locks failed, one run in the fifth the tenth and produce. The local juniors meet the Toronto champions in the next round.

We fall sorry for pitcher Royal mour of the Peterboro club, ce ing in the last inning after hitting that wild pitch, the sawhis team eliminated. Armour fooling have taken it too to heart, it is heart as it was no fault of his the Petes. He pitched a swell ball but the records show that Weeks was just a little better, the Kiwanis only being in trouble in the first and eighth.

Softball play-offs in this community are coming to a thick and fast. Belleville have come out victorious in O.A.S.A. play-off games in Belleville last summer, Thursday night for the past fortnight. This evening at the Fair Grounds the Corbin Locks, winners of the local intermediate "A" loop, clash with the Peterboro Weslon, champions of that sector in the first round of the provincial softball playdowns. Remember the Belleville-Peterboro play-offs last year? Well this series should be just as interesting. The Point Anne "consensus" will be played Trenton in advance in the intermediate "B" play-downs. Read Canaucque in Point Anne on Saturday night. It was announced today, that Ted Reid would be the sole porter during the play-off season. No sleep, no meal hours and plenty of worry.

Crossed Line First But Does Not Win

Harry Semark's Alaska, skippered by Pete Goyer, crossed the finishing line first in the "A" class weekly punt races of the Belleville Yacht Club yesterday, but alas the Alaska was not declared winner. Skipper Goyer being far astern and deliberately cutting off one leg of the last leg to cross the finishing line a scant few feet ahead of Duke Smith's Joka, which was declared the winner of the day.

A fairly good breeze welcomed the punt sailors yesterday with class 'A' and class 'B' craft competing. In the speedier 'A' class Smith's Joka finished first, four minutes in front of Maurice Callaghan's After You 2nd, the Alaska being awarded one point for third position, however. As the "A" class commenced into the final lap, the Joka was well in the lead of the A.F.Y. 2nd, while the Alaska was fully one mile astern of the second boat, when suddenly Skipper Goyer veered about and headed for the finishing line. "We crossed the finishing line ahead of the field for once at any rate," proudly stated Skipper Goyer as the large gallery applauded his humorous effort.

The "B" class craft also raced.

"WHO IS SYLVIA?"

You all know that famous song that asks the question "Who is Sylvia." The folks of West Virginia answered that question recently, when they selected Miss Jane Greer, of Morgantown, to reign as "Queen Sylvia VIII" at the Mountain State Forest Festival in October. A court comprising 22 princesses, also chosen for their beauty, will surround the queen when she is crowned and invested with the robes of her high station, on the opening day of the festival.

SUSPECT ARRESTED

Joseph Bruno who had been sought by Pennsylvania state police for the past nine months in connection with the slaying of seven persons in a "political massacre" is shown (ABOVE), at New York after he had been taken into custody by police. Bruno and several members of his family were being held at Pottsville, Pa., when he escaped during December of last year. The killings occurred when a political parade was fired upon as it passed Bruno's home.

EYE O.K. NOW

Tommy Farr, British heavyweight boxing champion, points to the cut under his eye, which he received during a training session at his camp at Long Branch, N.J. where he is preparing for his bout with world's heavyweight champion Joe Louis. It was feared that the injury would force postponement of the bout, but after Boxing Commissioner Bill Brown and Dr. William C. Walker, commission physician, examined the wound, it was found that postponement would be unnecessary.

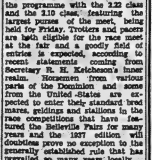
BELLEVILLE FAIR AUG. 31, SEPT. 1, 2, 3

TWO HORSE RACES TO BE HELD DAILY FOR THREE DAYS

Horsemen From Canada And United States Enter For Events



TRACK ANNALS

The harness race meet of the Belleville Fair is one of the features attractions of the Belleville Fair, the undoubted result of the splendid geographical position in which Belleville is placed and also owing to the fact that the local fall exhibition is customarily presented between the Ottawa and Toronto Exhibitions where great harness races are featured. After leaving the Ottawa Exhibition race meet horsemen usually stop off at the Belleville Fair, similar to the Canadian National Exhibition whose race meet is the week following the Belleville Fair.

Racing at Belleville this year will be confined to three days of racing, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of next week. The horse racing committee is composed of H. L. Ketcheson, J. Lafferty, Dr. Wellbanks, Cap. Gibson, Fred Denyes, W. D. Reid and others, announced today that two races would be held each afternoon with purses ranging in value from $160.00 to $210.00 for the fast 2.10 pace, to be featured on the last day of the Fair.

The Program

All horses entered are eligible on August the 26th for the six various classes that are included on the race program. On Wednesday the 2.30 and 2.14 classes will be featured, while on Thursday the 2.36 and 2.18 classes are on the programme with the 2.22 class and the 2.10 class featuring the largest purses of the meet, being held on Friday. Trotters and pacers are both eligible for the race meet at the fair and a goodly field of entries is expected, according to recent statements coming from Secretary R. H. Ketcheson's inner realm. Horsemen from various parts of the Dominion and more from the United States are expected to enter their standard bred mares, geldings and stallions in the race competitions that have featured the Belleville Fairs for many years and the 1937 edition will doubtless prove no exception to the generally established rule that has prevailed so many years locally.

Jean Harlow co-starred with Clark Gable in "Saratoga" coming to the Belle Saturday.

THREE-POINT LIQUOR POLICY STAND OF TORIES

Conservative Leader Rowe Promises to Remove Patronage

SUCCESSION DUTIES

Port Elgin, Ont., Aug. 26.—(CP)—The Conservative Party in Ontario was pledged today to a three-point liquor policy. Hon. Earl Rowe, party leader, told a Bruce riding rally yesterday that if the Conservatives won the election October 6 they would rid the province of "those broken-down beer dives" which have been granted licenses under what he termed the patronage system of the Liberal administration of Premier Hepburn.

Mr. Rowe said he proposed, if elected, to remove patronage, to return to a policy of control by a responsible board free from political interference, and to survey all licensed hotels and close all "mushroom dives".

Mushroom Dives'

"Standard hotels operating within the law and living up to requirements and respecting the law, and giving adequate service to the travelling public will receive the full consideration of the Board, and general assistance to maintain a higher standard of accommodation which will encourage tourist trade in Canada", he said. "Let me assure you, these mushroom dives will be closed and stay closed."

The Conservative leader turned to succession duties, challenging the Premier to publish a list of delinquent estates. He noted Mr. Hepburn claimed between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000 of which Ontario had been defrauded in succession duties.

No Star Chamber Methods

"When I am in power," said Mr. Rowe, "every dollar owed to this province in succession duties will be collected and they will not be collected by star chamber methods."

He announced his acceptance of a challenge from Education Minister L. J. Simpson, and declared he would abandon his own Dominion constituency of Dufferin-Simcoe to run against Dr. Simpson in Simcoe Centre. Mr. Rowe has represented Dufferin-Simcoe in the House of Commons for 14 years.

The rally selected Andrew Robinson, Kincardine Township farmer, as Conservative candidate for Bruce. He will oppose John W. Sinclair, Liberal.

Civic Decoration Day at Frankford

Rev. J. D. P. Knox, Belleville is Special Speaker at Memorial Park

Frankford—Frankford held its annual Civic Decoration Day on Sunday afternoon. The I.O.O.F. Glenford Rebekah Lodge, I.O.O.F., L.O.B.A. and the ex-Service men all took part.

The parade, which was headed by the Citizen's Band moved off from the Community Hall at 3 and after visiting the cemeteries returned to Memorial Park where a short service was held. Hymns were sung with the band accompanying and Rev. J. D. P. Knox of Belleville, addressed the gathering.

Wreaths were placed at the base of the cenotaph by representatives of the different organizations.

At the Frankford Cemetery, Rev. Knox led in prayer and while the Band played the old familiar hymn tunes, flowers were placed on the graves. Mr. Limerick McAuley's grave in the Roman Catholic Cemetery was then visited and a deputation of ex-Service men motored to Stockdale, where three of their ex-comrades are resting. The graves of ex-Service men were marked with white wooden crosses.

The weather was ideal and the attendance, one of the largest yet. Many came from Belleville, Trenton and the adjoining county points with their comrades in paying tribute to the memory of those who have passed on.

Late vacations give many a girl the chance to pick up bargains in fine clothes, such as a grand two-piece frock or suit of navy-and-cream dark green linen with a file of white cotton braid frogs from collar to hemline. There is a scarf of green and white dotted foulard.

A tonic to dress up simple white frocks is found in the gulse of peasant handkerchiefs in brightly patterned silk, worn around the head or dangling from the belt.

MISSING GIRL

By Maryse Rutledge

Once more in that white and black salon of Katia Tchetera's, Jane fell herself uncannily read by those keen black eyes that had seen so much and knew so much of the world. The strong-boned Georgian woman in her black tailored suit—a great fallen lady contemptuously on her feet—looked critically at the line of the beautiful gown on Jane and waved her fingers away. Perfect. Her "Young spring moon" model of palest yellow, tapering to points—setting off the wonderful purplish blue of Jane's eyes, the close-cropped curls of gold on her small head. Like a Greek sculpure of Youth.

"You must feel high up and above trouble in this dress," Katia said to her throaty, chanting voice. "It will bring you luck."

Jane shook her head. "No," she said, and for a second she and the Princess looked at each other across worlds. Then, the older woman smiled, her harsh features lighting up.

"Nitchevo!" she said. "That means in Russian a going on with Fate. But we must be gay. I shall see you at my friend Henri la Feuile's on Saturday—not so?"

It was on the afternoon of that day that Tony came back to Kaye-town, restless, uneasy about the Turnedo affair, which he increasingly felt to be a mistake. He never should have permitted Lorna to give such a party. Obstinate as he was about Jane's not wearing the Kaye emeralds, he knew there he would be much comment if she didn't. Therefore, he had bought earrings and a necklace of pearls worth a small king's ransom. Jane should not appear unadorned. These, in their velvet case, he had contemplated for some minutes. He didn't succeed his surprise and annoyance at finding her ready to motor in to town. "You forget we have an engagement tonight," he said curtly, and he fingered the velvet case without drawing it out, secretly, in his cynical cabling of women, he had hoped that this girl would compensate Jane for many things. Jane had not been quiet since that night in the shadows of the lawn. The cool fragrance of Jane's lips had lingered still him.

"I'm not forgetting anything," Jane was able to answer with spiritual indifference. Never again would she give way before him. "Lorna only expects us at ten," she added, standing in the big cool hall of massive shapes and Kaye portraits. Her yellow crepe matched a bowl of roses on the long, heavy table.

Tony, in his loose grey flannels, marooned to the bay window and back. "I suppose going to see that Cotter chap's cocktail parties, you'll be late. He's been defaming everyone with them."

Under her lapis lazi trimmed with narrow blue ribbon Jane's eyes were a deep shining blue. "I'm going," she said slowly, "to the Count in Paule's. He's giving a tea."

Tony didn't speak for a moment. His eyebrows flattened back over the fine grey of his eyes. "I suppose I have no right to object," he said at last with biting sourness. "But I've warned you already, the fellow's a blackmailer, hiding behind his portraits of women." The Kaye temper rode high as he took out the long blue velvet case and flung it on the table. "I brought you a few pearls for tonight," he said. "You might care to look at them—before you go."

Jane didn't even glance toward them. She was armored against everything—by hate or by. "I'm not wearing the Kaye emeralds or any other jewels by their place." She reached the door, and swept back, for there had come into his face a hurt, bitish look. "Oh, I'm sorry," she said impulsively. "I was kind of you, Tony. But I've had days to think alone in, and I'm not the silly, sentimental girl you saw last. I've got to go my way this afternoon and I can't look at my cheek and meet you later. We can make our formal entrance together if you'll be at the Howlands promptly at ten. Davis knows the house. And he will call with her car for us the door. There was nothing to do now but go.

He had pierced her armor by coming his own. Jane sat unhappily in the tan-cushioned limousine staring at the back of the liveried chauffeur who was later to drive her alone to the Howlands. She thought of the blue velvet case of pearls Tony had tossed on the table. He had meant them as a gesture of friendship, and she should have been gracious. But it had seemed the buying of brief pleasure when he must know what was in her heart. He had bought her from the beginning, she told herself bitterly. He had no right to prevent her going where she chose.

But as she neared la Paule's studio uptown on the East River she grew nervous and doubtful. Why had Tony slammed that ugly word blackmailer at her? Not even knowing that la Paule might have had a hold on her, if he remembered how and where he first met her. And she still wasn't sure. She shivered as she thought of the difference between the two men she could, in their separate ways, even now, hurt and discredit her: la Paule, who might only guess, and Bertram Cotter, who knew more than Tony of the truth. It occurred to her that Bertram had used a form of blackmail in withholding what he knew of Jane Carey or Fond du Lac, for the price of his silence in the spy house set. And in her despair she had trusted him with the other bits of the puzzle so that he had the whole picture. She sat straighter in the lonely sphinxlike of the Kaye car. Too late to worry about Bertram, or la Paule. There would be amusing people at a studio tea—the Princess Tchetera and new faces to divert her.

But Henri la Paule was alone when she entered the huge room. There was a Latin grace to his movement of pleasure as he advanced to greet her. And in his pale blue eyes Jane read with a fair degree of accuracy what he planned this. There would be no one else.

CHAPTER XV.

HATE BREWS

There was nothing terrifying in the Count la Paule's manner, however, as he bent over Jane's hand with the easy courtesy of a foreigner greeting a lovely woman. She looked down at his narrow blond head and the flannels he wore with such elegance, and then around the big studio with its grey walls and stretch of windows along the river. Rough silk curtains of Indiana color dimmed the light. For though the Princess Tchetera was to be here." Her voice sounded very young and a little frightened. She could not know well the Princess and la Paule understood one another. Other women had come to his studio before expecting to find the Princess, and making everything safe and all right. And many portraits had been painted of Tchetera, in the making of the Princess attending the seances.

La Paule straightened from her bend, but his pale face was again secret, insolent, yet with a distinct deference toward Jane. At the last moment Katia could not come. Had I be honest? I asked no other.

"You should have told me." Jane moved a little nervously, making the door. Slender and smiling, he stood between her and it. "How absurd and naive to imagine any unpleasant intentions behind the faintly waxy charm that had attracted her from the beginning!

She turned back. "I can only stay a little while." Her heart still uneven, she looked with greater horror at spaces luminous with color. There were so many things that Jane Carey of Fond du Lac had to learn before Tony Kaye set her adrift in Paris.

"You will have tea? A cocktail first? You will excuse me, my man is out, so I will serve you. Sans formalité, n'est ce pas, chere Madame." He gestured toward a wide, low couch heaped with gay and red pin cushions. His high French voice drawled, furring his "r's".

Why explain that his man was out so that indeed they were alone? But a tantalus flowed through Jane in the unfamiliar atmosphere, mystifying fear. Kaye-stone and Tony's dark, arrogant face seemed already so lost to her. And the pearls Tony had flung on the table in their blue velvet case as unreal as a dream. She sank among the cushions with a sigh.

In the quiet filtering of a four o'clock June sun, canvases began to glow out—exquisite languid women, pallidly pastelized in silks and jewels, against pale backgrounds. On an easel a canvas stood with a black silk covering.

"I understand now why you have a reputation of painting only beautiful women," she murmured.

La Paule smiled at her as she sat there, leaning a little forward from the cushions. The close-cropped gold of her curls gleamed under the wide straw brim that flared like a halo around the winged youth of her face. Then he turned his back to her as he shook the cocktails. When he wheeled to offer her a glass, he had grown suddenly grave. "I have something here to show you," he said.

Jane's eyes widened in question over her glass.

He walked over to the covered canvas. "There is a picture I must paint. Those others"—and he shrugged his fine fingers—"they are stupid." He slid the cover from the canvas. "You see, I need a model for the head," he said softly. "Though I could do it from memory—but, confinement, on sadly."

Jane was on her feet with a little cry, staring at the figure of a girl in black robed against a background of towering houses. The slender body seemed arrowed with exaggeration and rapture, and the head, only sketched in, was lifted as if life and love were sealing up with all her soul at the stone facades that mirrored it. And every daring line was the very spirit of the Jane Carey he had observed that day in early June on Park Avenue, fiercely longing to enter into kingdoms of same.

"You will permit me to complete the most beautiful picture I shall ever paint?" La Paule covered the canvas again, and stepped closer to Jane, who had grown white and cold.

"So you knew me all the time," she said lifelessly. "When you spoke to me that afternoon, you must have known I was quite normal and rather poor—I mean my clothes are that way. A few days later, the papers all had the story of the mysterious girl, beautifully dressed, wandering on Park Avenue, who claimed to have forgotten her name or where she came from. Yes, you probably saw a snapshot of the girl and Tony Kaye the papers published with romantic accounts of how he had snatched her from the crowd and a policeman, and sloped with her."

La Paule nodded with a spread of his graceful hands. "It may be."

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE BELLE

"They Gave Him a Gun"
Spencer Tracy, Gladys George, Franchot Tone, Edna May Oliver
A Night in Thrilling Drama
Now Playing

Hollywood is concerned primarily with the production of entertainment and secondarily with art, little with either, depends. Even when it does, the objective is still entertainment and the rest of it is incidental.

When William Joyce Cowan, formerly A. E. F. officer of the line, wrote the novel, "They Gave Him a Gun", he drew up an indictment against the war. As one who had been through it and could speak with authority, that was his privilege.

But when Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer bought the story, it was with the intention to make a picture that would entertain people and if it carried any message, it would be selves, would interpret it. The picture opened today at the Belle Theatre a two days' engagement, Thursday and Friday, and immediately established its drag, purpose, judging from the reaction of the matinee audience.

It is, of course, a war story, but its great significance lies in the fact that it carries with it the era of peace, after the World War, when the hearts and souls of men still carry wartime wounds. Your soldier of the line in Flanders speaks of his experience but seldom and then in laconic phrases. He wants to forget it, but he can't.

This picture reflects the man. Spencer Tracy, whose remarkable performances in four successive hit pictures have established him a theatre going public, as the hero. Here, the good points of "San Francisco" and the honest Portuguese sailor of "Captains Courageous" become a strong basis for an enlista in the regulars for the duration of the war.

Gladys George is the Red Cross nurse with whom he falls in love, and Franchot Tone a portrayal of small-town bookkeeper, a weakling to whom they gave a gun and a uniform.

The supporting cast includes Edgar Dearing, a former top lieutenant in the army, Cliff Edwards, Mary Treen and others. W. C. Fields Dyke who gave you "San Francisco"; "After the Thin Man" and many of Hollywood's most notable screen triumphs, was in command here.

The story is sharply drawn and delicately presented by this group of experienced players. In France the former clerk and ex-civilian man both fall in love with a Red Cross nurse. She marries the weakling, out of pity, when Tracy is reported among the missing. He escapes from a prison camp and they meet again in civil life. But now, having learned to use a gun in action, the clerk has become a gangster.

Destiny eliminates him and the balance of love is restored. It is simple in the telling, but the picture has a wealth of detail and a power of visual and auditory help that swayed the audience. With variations, Spencer Tracy has equalled his performance in "Fury", "San Francisco" "Libeled Lady" and "Captains Courageous."

Preceding the above outstanding screen production at the Belle-to-day and Friday is an excellent vaudeville offering. The entertainment occupying at 2.30, 7.10 and 9.15 p.m. another of those always acceptable and very entertaining "Hyte Hights Oddities entitled "Jail Rac's Night Out" and a comedy that is truly worthwhile, featuring Ben Blue, Gloria Holden and "Two Young", round out an excellent two hours of pleasing enjoyment for anyone. Don't miss it.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Turn Off the Moon"
Gay Musical Romance With Fun Fanatics
Charles Ruggles' realistic characterizations on the screen have often made it necessary for him to offer a humorous impersonation that his offstage life is similar to the role he plays.

To avoid any such notion, since his current part of Dewdidit in "Turn Off the Moon," at the Capitol until Friday nite as smash hit No. 1, presents him as an astrological hypochondriac, Mr. Ruggles explained his views on astrology in a recent interview.

"Astrology has a definite place in the world if taken with a grain of salt," he said, "Psychologically speaking it is a perfect case valve ... but if you were to guide your life entirely by your horoscope most of which are merely mimeographed Mandrels, you're playing a dirty trick on yourself."

"I love stars. There is nothing in the world that adds romance more than stars, except possibly the lack of same. But I do not, definitely and emphatically believe my destiny is controlled by any heavenly

"I once had my horoscope read that was back in the days when I worked on the stage. The astrologer told me I should make a success in my life's work. My life's work according to the stars was plumbing."

Mr. Ruggles claims his latest production owes a great deal to astrology. "The comedy situations are based on my refusing to marry my sweetheart, who has been waiting fifteen years, until the stars are in their right orbits. My astrologer tells me that before this can take place I must aid a pair of lovers. The complications that result are, me one of the pair. And, what's more it's surrounded by excellent music, swell dancing, beautiful girls and a supporting cast that includes Eleanore Whitney, Johnny Downs, Kenny Baker, Phil Harris and Ben Blue."

PRESID ENT ROOSEVELT ORDERS 12,00 0 UNITED STATES MARINES TO CHINA

The United States has moved to strengthen its armed forces in China and at the same time served notice upon belligerent Japanese and Chinese that Americans rights, lives and property must be protected when President Roosevelt ordered 12,000 marines of the sixth regiment from San Diego to war-battered Shanghai. Marching orders for the marines followed a declaration by Secretary of State Cordell Hull that the U.S. had no intention of withdrawing from the Far East.

The marines who have been ordered to China are shown in the upper photograph as they passed in review at San Diego. Commander of the marines being dispatched to China and upon arrival there commander of all marines in China, Brigadier-Gen. John C. Beaumont is shown in the lower left. A typical marine machine-gun crew is shown in the lower right as they went into action during recent maneouvres.

WORKS FOR CITY AGAIN

Jimmy Walker, former mayor of New York, was emphatically denying he was thinking about a pension when a photographer snapped this picture. Mr. Walker was recently appointed assistant counsel to the New York Transit commission just seventeen days before the time when his right to a pension would have expired. "Let's get it straight about that pension," he told newspapermen. "A pension is the last thing I'm thinking of."

FRENCH PILOTS IN MONTREAL AIR SHOW

Among the arrivals at New York aboard the S.S. Paris were Mr. E. Dewoitine, well-known French aeroplane builder (left) and Marcel Doret, famous French aviator. Both men were on their way to Montreal where Doret will take part in the Franco-Canadian air pageant to be held there on August 28 and 29. Marcel Doret, pilots, will give a performance of racing and acrobatics at St. Hubert airport, scene of several similar shows in the past.

WHAT CAUSED PORTUGAL TO BREAK WITH CZECHS?

Portugal's severance of relations with Czechoslovakia has created a sensation in Europe. Portugal, a dictator nation, aligned with Nazi Germany in the Spanish civil war crisis, recalled its minister to Czechoslovakia when that nation refused permission of its largest armament factory to fill a Portuguese order for guns. The break was made on grounds that Czechoslovakia refused to deliver the guns because of pressure from "a third nation." Czechoslovakia, a democracy, itself has been the subject of bitter political attack in German Nazi circles as being an ally of France and the Soviet Union. Portugal, favoring the Fascist cause, has been a base for shipments to General Francisco Franco. The Cmco, government, headed by Dr. Edouard Benes, expressed "astonishment" over the breach. In Portugal, President Marshall Antonio Carmona shares rule with the Fascist-inclined premier, Dr. Antonio Salazar.

SCHMELING JUST LOOKS ON WHILE JOE PLAYS BILLIARDS

With Max Schmeling looking on, Joe Louis, heavyweight champion of the world, turned on full steam in his six-round workout against three sparring partners. More than 1,500 spectators sat through a steady rain to watch Joe belt Pat Silvera, Tiger Hairston and George Nicholson from pillar to post during two fast rounds each. After the strenuous workout, Louis and Schmeling —the man who knocked him out— played a game of pocket billiards with Mike Jacobs, new impresario of Madison Square boxing, who is promoting the fight between Louis and Farr. That's Jacob's scoring one at the LEFT as Joe tries one in the side pocket. Schmeling looks on, just as he will look on when the Brown Bomber defends his heavyweight crown.

YOU ARE A KNOCK-OUT! HOW DO YOU DO IT?

You Can Do It Too

WHY DO YOU choose to be thin, languid, intolerant, short-tempered, nervous, lacking in energy and ambition—"all in"? You need not be if you follow the thrilling experience of millions of others in Canada and 57 foreign countries and take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Try this fine old tonic treatment and you will be surprised at your prompt return to normal weight, your new pep, good nature, confidence, bracing energy and renewed ambition.

Lack of sufficient iron in your blood starves your whole system—cheats it of "The Makings" of rich, red, nourishing blood, and you slump to indifferent or poor health.

Read this convincing testimony of Mrs. B—, which is typical of thousands of such letters in our files:

"For the last eight years I have not gained a pound. I never had any ambition to do anything. I couldn't eat; just picked at my food. My husband went everywhere alone because I wouldn't want to go. None of the medicines I took seemed to do me any good. However, since I have taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills I have gained five pounds. I eat three good meals a day and I certainly enjoy doing my housework. Also my husband doesn't have to go out alone now; I accompany him. It seems as if I have just started to live my life."

Start today to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and soon you, too, will find new energy, revived ambition—good health through the new, rich, red blood in your veins.

The Right Girl

By MARGARETTA BRUCKER

McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

"When the time comes I'll pick the right girl," Don Farrell had said. "You'll see."

Don had come to Cateerville on a government engineering job. He was a tall loose limbed fellow with deep-set gray eyes, and an infectious smile.

He had made the quoted remark on his first day at Cateerville. Bob Haines had first told him he'd better watch out for his heart for we had the prettiest crop of girls south of the Mason and Dixie line.

Don had grinned—picked up his grip and asked: "Which way to the best boarding house?"

"Mrs. Ann Nelson's over on Myrtle street," Bob replied. Then he'd winked at the fellows standing about the soda bar in the drug store. "What you bet you'll start picking that girl before you're 24 hours older?"

"I'm pretty hard to suit," Don had called back over his shoulder.

"Wait 'till he meets the Nelson twins," Bob had said then. "Wonder which one he'll fall for?"

Don hadn't been in Cateerville two days when he had them both down to the drug store — and it didn't take half an eye to see that he was falling fast . . . but which one? that was the puzzler.

Carrie Lou and Emmy Lou were their names and when their own mother couldn't tell them apart how was a long-legged Yankee going to come to any decision? He had the whole town wondering.

There's no romance can get under way with three principals. Somebody's got to drop out. One of the twins had to be disqualified. Evidently the stain began to tell for gossip had it that the girls were snapping at each other. Two weeks after Don's first appearance he turned up at the drug store one evening with one twin . . . but which one?

Bets began to run high around the soda bar.

From betting on Don the whole community started betting on the twins. They'd flirted before, with fellows from Georgia to the Mississippi basin and never had had a heart flutter. Now this gangling Yankee engineer had sunk them both.

Then one afternoon a man from the T.V.I. drifted into town and said something about Don's wife. Say . . . that burst the town wide open. It was about four o'clock; in the afternoon when the twins came into the drug store. Both were in white—just their belts different, one blue and one red.

The preacher's wife was in the store buying candy for that Big Maltese that always sits in her front window. She marches right over to the girls.

"There was a man in here a minute ago who said that young Mr. Farrell has a wife," she says. The preacher's wife is alright but she feels it her duty to look after the morals of the young."

If Don hadn't followed right at her heels it wouldn't have been so dramatic. As it was it knocked all the home talent shows in Gatesville right into a cocked hat. Don burst through the screen. His eyes were almost black. He came right over to where the girls were sitting.

The preacher's wife backed off but the fellows around the soda bar stood and stared and figured that all that money they'd bet on the twins was as good as gone.

One of the twins was beating a regular tattoo on the floor with her slipper and the other was fiddling with a soda straw and breaking it into little pieces. I guess they felt pretty queer.

"What have you heard?" Don demanded. He didn't sit down. He stood leaning across the table and his glance included both the twins. His long brown fingers gripped the edge of the table.

"That you were married," said one. She said it quiet-like as there was a lot behind her tone. Some folks don't show their emotion by being noisy. The other twin did. She said: "Yes . . . that you were married." Her voice was thin and sharp. "Is it true?" she demanded.

"Yes, it's true."

The one with the blue belt who had spoken first opened her lips, closed them and sank back into her chair. The soda straw was torn to chaff and lay scattered about the chocolate soda which she hadn't tasted. The twin in the red belt burst into a regular torrent of abuse. She told Don what she thought of him . . . what she thought of all Yankees . . . well it was almost as if she'd stripped off her clothes and stood there naked. Most of the fellows slunk out of the store ashamed for her. Being the soda jerker I had to stick.

Finally the twin in the blue belt began to cry. Dan stepped right around the table and took her in his arms. He kissed her . . . "You . . ." the twin in the red belt started screaming and clawing him with her soft little hands. Don didn't seem to mind. He was grinning and showing his white teeth and saying: "I always said that when the time came I'd pick the right girl . . . now I know I've made no mistake, Carrie Lou and I were married last Friday . . ." I didn't hear the rest for his head was bent and he was saying it into Carrie Lou's soft dark hair.

I turned around and pretended to be busy polishing some soda glasses. I heard the screen door bang behind the twin in the red belt. After this she wouldn't need a dress different for everyone in town to know her. She'd always be the twin that Don Farrell didn't pick.

War Ramblings Round the Globe

Hendaye, Franco-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 26 (AP)—General Franco took Santander because he has the money to pay his war bills, says Gen. Gondra deputy for Bilbao.

The aide of the Insurgent chieftain, speaking last night before a joyous crowd in Seville, an Insurgent base in Southern Spain, also reported today to have commented:

"Money, money, money and three things are necessary in war. We have it, therefore we have an army. Our victories are not over yet!"

Valencia, Aug. 26 (AP)—Government troops pushed an offensive today on the Aragon front of Northeastern Spain. A Government spearhead was thrust into General Franco's lines in the southeast of Saragossa, where the town of Quinto, long held by the Insurgents on the Zaragoza-Valencia Road, was occupied by Madrid-Valencia troops.

Often the Government had attacked Quinto but not until today did it conquer.

Special Attractions at Belleville Fair

Cross-Cut Reaches North Boundary

Underground work at the Eva Lake property has reached the northern boundary of the property and has been driven 20 feet into the adjoining property. Work is now being carried on in the cross-cut at the 100-foot level and is being driven southerly. The cross-cut is now 150 feet in length.

A most interesting phase of the property's development has been the discovery of several veins parallel to the main vein. Work on these veins will be carried on as rapidly as possible.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford by Financial Service.

MARKET COMMENT

The local market continues a dull affair, although business is noted in a few directions. Yesterday, Shawinigan Water and Power came in for good demand and moved up, the buying emanating from London. There is no doubt but that this security appears attractive at the moment, particularly when it is considered that an increase in the dividend rate, cannot be long delayed.

The first batch of whisky produced immediately following prohibition days, amounting to 747,000 in December, the U. S. Treasury has disclosed, as it also revealed existence of a record accumulation in bonded warehouses. Regulations require that whisky in bonded warehouses be aged at least four years before it may be withdrawn for sale. December 5 marks the fourth anniversary of prohibition repeal. It was estimated that some 18,000,000 gallons of post-repeal whisky will have met the legal minimum age in December and be eligible to be given Internal Revenue strip stamp, indicating the product was four years old or over. The red stamp is required on bottles containing liquor under four years of age.

Approximately 22,000 new oil wells will be drilled this year to meet the increased demand for petroleum products created by automobiles, now numbering 30,000,000 new oil burners which will be sold by 1937, according to The Lamp, Standard Oil Company of New Jersey publication.

From the increased number of enquiries reaching Financial Service it would seem as if the public is again becoming interested in the market on a greater scale than in recent months.

McIntyre Perceptive In Northwestern Quebec

From a northern source it is learned that negotiations between the officials of McIntyre Porcupine Mines and Amphi Gold Syndicate for acquisition of the latter's property adjoining the Malartic Gold Fields are nearing a satisfactory conclusion. It is reported that the deal will be signed this week.

The Amphi property enjoys strategic location on the main Malartic zone of enrichment, being situated adjoining Parbec-Malartic and Siscoe Malartic.

Entry of the big perceptive producer into Northwestern Quebec comes as big news for the district. The effect is heartening and serves to again stimulate mining and prospecting in the area.

McColl-Frontenac Oil Company

Unofficially it is reported that the McColl-Frontenac Petroleum Oil Company for the first six months of its fiscal year will show something around $600,000 better when compared with the same period of 1936. Incidentally, the Street is also interested in the report that half yearly statements hereafter might be forthcoming from McColl-Frontenac in future.

Marmora Wins Over Deloro in Softball

Marmora (Special)—After two rain attempts in close games to defeat C. McInroy's Deloro softballers, Alec Gawley's Marmora team won the winners in an interesting game at Deloro on Tuesday evening, winning by 8-4. Both teams relied on pitching, batting and fielding to hold well throughout the game. Aiding Marmora's success were double plays, Burns to Hollingsworth and Phillips to Hollingsworth.

Marmora (Batteries ff): Smith c; Gray cf; Fox p; Hamilton 1b; Nobes 2b; Hollingsworth 3b; Kerr cf; Burns ss.

Deloro—Brown, Richardson c, Trewhella p, Smith, 2b, Regan 1b, Gray p, R. Richardson cf, F. Lovejoy, rf, J. Lovejoy lf.

WALL ST. CLOSE

New York, Aug. 26.—(AP)—Stock market leaders tumbled 1 to 5 or more points in today's market as fresh apprehensions over far eastern and domestic difficulties brought selling in all departments.

The downswing, at its worst, put the ticker tape at noon 2½ to 3 hours behind floor dealings for the first time in months. There were some recoveries later, but the pace slowed. Offerings again appeared and prices were around the lowest level of the day near the final hour.

Transfers were about 1,000,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE CLOSING

Toronto, Aug. 26.—(CP)—The market had a sinking spell today and all groups closed lower. Base metals were the weakest and they failed to show any rallying tendencies at the close. Golds also closed up a little in spots but were off down at the finish and in the industrials the close was down for the War in the Orient quiet, holding stocks and miscellaneous issues.

Brokerage circles blamed the war in the Orient for much of the weakness. International Nickel lost more than a point and Hollinger, Ray and Noranda were off 1 1-2 to 3 points and Sherritt had a two-point decline. Coast Copper, Waite-Amulet, Sherritt and Pend. Oreille weakened 10 to 15 cents each and Falconbridge closed 50 cents down at 7.85. Eldorado dipped to 2.67 and recovered.

Ninety per cent of the active gold issues declined and most issues were not heavy. Recessions of 15 to 25 cents appeared in Bralorne, O'Brien, and Siscoe and 5 to 10 cents for Wright Hargreaves, Sylvanite, Pickle Crow, Central Patricia, East Malartic, Canadian Malartic, Jacobs, Hard Rock, Jellicoe, Kerr-Addison, Moneta, Stadacona, Powell-Rouyn and Oro Plata. Dome lost about 1 1-2 and Molson's 1-4. The market was a little higher for Buffalo-Ankerite, Pioneer, J. M. Consolidated and Wood-Cadillac.

Livestock

Toronto, Aug. 26—(CP)—Hogs dropped 15 cents on the Toronto livestock market today. Lambs were weak while cattle, calves and sheep traded at steady prices. Cattle quickened Thursday was also dull.

Receipts reported by the Dominion Livestock Branch, were: Cattle 230; calves 30; hogs 250; sheep and lambs 90.

Weighty steers ranged from $7.75 to $8.50 and good heifer and cow grades sold at $6. One load of heifers brought $7. Occasional medium cows sold slowly at $3.50 to $4.75 with picked lots as high as $5.

The few calves offered sold at $8 to $9.50 with grassers bringing $4.

Off-track bacon hogs closed at $9.25 to $10. Sows were quoted at $6.50 to $7.

Good ewe and wether lambs were $9, other cradle from $7 to $8. A few sheep ranged from $3 to $4 cwt.

M.P.P. Predicts Ban On Women Drinking In Beverage Rooms

Wingham, Ont., Aug. 26 (CP)—A prediction drinking by women in beverage rooms in Ontario will be discontinued was made by Charles Robertson, M.L.A., Goderich, addressing a meeting of the Huron-Bruce Liberal Association last night. Mr Robertson defeated W. J. MacKay, ex-M.P.-L.A., for the Liberal nomination in the riding, after George H. Hepworth, Wingham Bigby newspaper publisher, withdrew from the contest.

"We are going to try and restrict the beverage rooms," said Mr. Robertson. "I don't believe they are a good thing in any municipality."

"In the old licensed bar rooms, there were no women and it continued. The day is not far away when women will be excluded from beverage rooms entirely. In fact, in the first draft of the bill (the Liquor Control Act) drinking was permitted in beverage rooms between sexes. Then cases (he named them) which made it compulsory for hotels to have two rooms, one for women, one for men. Now, I predict that drinking by women will not be permitted in beverage rooms."

Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Aug. 26—Local produce market had a steady tone yesterday, little change being reported in prices compared with the previous day's levels. Receipts were 439 boxes of eggs, 4 boxes of butter and 1,000 lbs. of cheese, including truck arrivals.

The next weekly auction of Quebec cheese was held at noon at the Board of Trade, when 1,767 boxes were offered, the No. 1 white selling at 13 9-16c, and the No. 1 colored the same price. On the open market No. 1 Ontario cheese held at 14c to 14 1-4c.

At the Canadian Commodity Exchange there was a fairly fresh egg store butter sold at 36 7-8c, and 900 boxes sold at 37c, the latter the closing price. Quotations with Quebec seconds, 36 score, quoted at 36 to 36 1-2c.

On the egg market graded showings in Quebec were confined generally at 23 1-2c for A-large, 29 1-2c for A-medium, 22c to 23 1-2c for B-large, 20c to 21c for B-medium. Through the Commodity Exchange posted prices of 36c, 28 1-2c, and 20c, respectively.

knocked senseless by an exploding bomb, and K. L. Hall-Patch, financial representative of the British government in China.

Large British Flag Carried

Despite the fact that the automobile carried a large British flag the Japanese planes dived low and peppered the occupants with machine gun bullets about 20 miles from Shanghai.

Lovat-Fraser jumped off the car to see the reason for the attack and one of the Japanese planes loosed a bomb which missed the wounded ambassador but knocked Lovat-Fraser senseless.

Japanese naval authorities threatened to include other foreign shipping in the 200-mile blockade of China's seacoast established by Japan as a stringent measure to relieve the pressure on her land troops in the Shanghai area.

Chinese held their positions all the way from Chapei in Northern Shanghai to the Yangtze River, 12 miles to the north. An official Japanese spokesman said the Japanese army "was experiencing some opposition" in its advance on Shanghai.

To Halt Shipping

A spokesman for the third Japanese fleet, warning of the possible extension of the blockade proclaimed yesterday to foreign vessels, declared that "foreign shipping along the China Coast may be halted by Japanese warships patrolling the area."

He added:

"We exercise the privilege of preemption towards foreign bottoms carrying a cargo which in time of war would constitute contraband".

In International law, "preemption" is the right of a belligerent to seize and purchase at an agreed price other contraband of war than absolute contraband belonging to a neutral and en route to the enemy in its own territory or on the high seas or in unappropriated territory.)

Chinese Dig In

An Associated Press correspondent surveyed the countryside North of Shanghai this morning and found the Chinese dug in heavily and in strength.

Chinese held their positions all the way from Chapei in Northern Shanghai to the Yangtze River, 12 miles to the north. An official Japanese spokesman said the Japanese army "was experiencing some opposition" in its advance on Shanghai.

To Halt Shipping

A spokesman for the third Japanese fleet, warning of the possible

The Japanese naval spokesman declared that absence of declaration of war was "merely a legal view as hostilities are going on" and indicated Japan would have to take wartime measures to prevent supplies from reaching the Chinese.

CONDITION OF BRITISH AMBASSADOR IMPROVES

Japanese Ambassador Calls It All a Mistake Sees Wounded Official

British Demands On Japan Are Presented At London

PRESS RESTRAINED

G. Rowe Will Be Sent From England to China

Shanghai, Aug. 27. (CP-Reuss)—Improvement in the condition of Sir Hugha Knatchbull-Hugessen, British Ambassador to China, was reported in a medical bulletin issued tonight.

Sir Hughe was at Country Hospital, to which he was brought fifty miles by automobile yesterday from Wuxih, northwest of Shanghai where he was critically wounded when a Japanese airplane machine-gunned his motorcar.

Is Resting Easily.

The bulletin said it had been established that his right kidney had been hit by a bullet, but that bleeding was moderate and decreasing. His back was broken but the spinal cord itself was intact.

Sir Hughe's temperature was 103. He rested easily throughout the day.

"The general condition of the patient has improved distinctly," the bulletin concluded.

No further bulletin will be issued until tomorrow.

He was in acute pain and his life was still in danger, the bulletin said, hinged on the blood transfusion from H. A. Thomson, a United States navy pharmacist's mate, of Bainbridge, Md.

LEADS JAP FORCES

General Iwane Matsui (above), formerly commander-in-chief of the Japanese garrison at Formosa, who has been appointed supreme commander of the Nipponese forces now doing battle with Chinese at Shanghai. This was seen by observers, to be a move to co-ordinate the Japanese military activities in the war zone. Shortly afterward, it was announced that a Jap landing party had obtained a "toe hold" in the Chapoo area, about 15 miles north of Shanghai.

a British destroyer from her summer home. She was expected to arrive tomorrow.

"All a Mistake"

The only visitor the ambassador was allowed to see today was the Japanese ambassador, Kamon Kawagoe, who called to explain the attack by the Japanese fliers was an "all a mistake". The Japanese envoy said the pilots were unable to see the British flag flying from the ambassador's car as he sped from Nanking to Shanghai.

The British envoy had planned his meeting with Kawagoe for a different setting and a different cause. Although it was not so described officially, it was generally understood he intended to see Kawagoe in the hope of ending the conflict which has ranged for two weeks about Shanghai.

London, Aug. 27.—(AP)—Authoritative quarters said the British government's demands, in connection with the wounding of its ambassador to China were presented today to the Japanese Ambassador in London.

The demand was understood to have been made by Foreign Secretary Eden to Shigeru Yoshida, the Japanese envoy, when the latter called at the Foreign Office to tender officially Japan's regrets.

No information was forthcoming as to the nature of Eden's communication to the Japanese Ambassador.

Sir Hugh Montgomery Knatchbull-Hugessen, the Ambassador, was gravely wounded Thursday when shot by Japanese airmen on the road between Nanking and Shanghai.

Ambassador Yoshida spent half an hour with Sir Pierson Dixon, secretary, indicating public interest in the incident. A crowd gathered in the Downing Street entrance to the Foreign Office to witness the Japanese envoy's arrival and departure.

Earlier in the day Quo Tai-Chi, the Chinese Ambassador, had visited Eden.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. W. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Rain from trees! We usually think of the earth getting its moisture by rain or by falling from the clouds. However, there is a certain Peruvian tree, called the "rain-tree" that transpires so heavily that it wets the ground under its branches. Along the Pacific coast in California the heavy fog, blowing in from the ocean, wets the sage bush so much it drips, and underneath these bushes the ground is green while a little farther inland it is quite dry. Here, little patches of green grass are very welcome to the cattle.

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Aug. 27 (CP)—A deep disturbance is centred over Hudson Straits and a shallow low is moving eastward across Saskatchewan with relatively high pressure extending from Northern Ontario northwestward to the lower Mackenzie Valley. Showers have occurred in most parts of St. Lawrence and light showers in West Manitoba though it has been fair and warm in most districts of Eastern Canada. Thunderstorms occurred in Northern Alberta but fair, warm weather has prevailed in other parts of the West.

Lake Superior—Moderate winds; fair today, cool in north portion. Saturday, moderate to fresh southeast to southwest winds; mostly fair and becoming a little warmer; scattered thundershowers in west portion.

Manitoba—Mostly fair and warm; thundershowers in a few districts. Saturday, west to northwest winds, partly cloudy and becoming cooler; probably a few scattered showers.

Saskatchewan—Mostly fair and warm with local thundershowers in some districts; cooler tonight. Saturday, west to northwest winds; partly cloudy and cooler.

Alberta—Mostly fair and comparatively cool tonight and Saturday.

WASTE OF MONEY TO REOPEN AGENCY STATES HEPBURN

Trade Increased Since Ontario House in London Closed

DEFENDS POSITION

Reiterates His Stand on C.I.O. Issue at Arthur

Owen Sound, Ont., Aug. 27 (CP)—Ontario House, provincial trade office in London, England, served no useful purpose and that was why it was closed by Premier Mitchell Hepburn's government, Mr. Hepburn told North Grey Liberals here last night.

Mr. Hepburn commented on the promise of Hon. Earl Rowe, Ontario Conservative leader, to reopen the agency if his party wins the general election Oct. 6. It would be a waste of money, the premier said. When Ontario House was operating, Ontario trade was in Great Britain amounted to $128,000,000 a year. Now it was $346,000,000.

Roland Patterson, who won North Grey in the first by-election of the Hepburn regime, was renominated without opposition by a Liberal convention.

Speaks At Arthur.

Mr. Hepburn spoke at Arthur yesterday afternoon. Earlier, Wellington Liberals selected Ross McEwing, Maryboro Township farmer, to oppose Dr. James McQuibban, Conservative candidate, a brother of the late Hon. Harry McQuibban, former House leader, Dr. George McQuibban.

Mr. Hepburn defended his war on the Committee for Industrial Organization. Ontario had the most advanced labor legislation in Canada, he declared.

"We are on the right track," he said. "We will preserve collective bargaining and not collective balderdash. I believe in the right of men to go back to labor if they desire. And I believe in the right of men to go back to work when they want to. And they are going to do it long Mr. Lewis (John L. Lewis, C.I.O. head) to come to Canada."

Lewis and Homer Martin, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, are watching the Ontario election, Mr. Hepburn continued.

WEBER, FIELDS GO HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood, Aug. 27 (AP)—Two gentlemen, one of them gentlemen wearing bobbing goatees, are shouting at each other. Then the conclusion and applause die down, one says:

Cowboy Actors Play So Well, Dudes Think Five Killed

Police Expect to Find Remains of Range Massacre. Are Surprised

FIND BOYS JOKING

Mountain Pass, Calif., Aug. 27 (AP)—A bunch of the boys shot it out—with blanks—yesterday in the streets of this little cattle town last night and scared a party of dudes so badly they spread the report four ranchers had been killed.

A posse of peace officers from miles around rode into Mountain Pass, expecting to find the remains of a range massacre. Instead they found some wranglers still whooping at their little joke.

Toting shooting irons, flaming bandanas, five-gallon hats and jingling spurs, the cowboys were staging a celebration when police arrived. The tourists had been educated by wild west movies. The cowboys were born actors.

Into their midst rode Sheriff Eugene Biggar, man. He shouted a fearful threat. Other desperadoes dashed around. Weapons seemed drawn. Shots rang out. The tourists scurried for cover.

But the battle blazed to an end, four men sprawled in the dust, apparently lifeless.

By the time the tourists' tension of the affair reached Los Angeles there were five dead—not four—and it was a cattle raid on Nez Bell's ranch that had cost their lives.

Bell, western film star and husband of Clara Bow, former "it" girl, spent several hours last night denying all.

Town Wiped Out in Desperate Action Near Shanghai

WRIT IS ISSUED AGAINST ESTATE FOR $1,854,577

Executors of Will, Wife and Children of Late R. Laidlaw Named

ABANDONED ENQUIRY

Early in Year Government Opened Enquiry Into Estate

Toronto, Aug. 27 (CP)—A writ issued at Osgoode Hall here today claimed $1,854,577 from the estate of the late Robert Laidlaw, Toronto lumber merchant. The amount was sought as succession duties, penalties and interest due the Ontario government under the Succession Duty Act.

The writ was issued on behalf of Hon. Paul Leduc, Acting Attorney-General. It named as defendants Robert A. Laidlaw and Walter G. Laidlaw, executors of the wills of the late Robert Laidlaw and his wife, Jessie Laidlaw, and Ann Laidlaw, Margaret Laidlaw and Fannie Brown MacBeth.

Balance Owing Is Claim.

The endorsement on the writ sets forth that the plaintiff's claim "is for $1,854,577.21, being the balance of duty, interest thereon and penalties, payable on and by reason of the death of Robert Laidlaw, of the city of Toronto, lumber merchant."

It was issued under the provisions of the Succession Duty Act, 1927, and amendments thereto and the Succession Duty Act, 1934, and amendments thereto.

The Attorney-General also claimed "such further or other sums as may be payable for duty, interest and penalties", and "declarations as to what property and what transmission of property of the said estate are liable to duty under the said Acts and amendments thereto, and as to the amount of such duty and the time or times when the same is payable and for judgment for the payment thereof."

Case Reopened.

Earlier this year the Ontario government reopened the Robert Laidlaw estate and commissioned Mr. Justice C. F. McTague to investigate the Provincial Treasurer's claims against it for Succession Duty in addition to the $645,772 already paid by the executors.

Mr. Justice McTague decided to state a case upon which the Ontario Court of Appeal might decide certain questions raised by counsel for the executors. Premier Hepburn announced the government would abandon the enquiry and proceed against the executors by an action in the courts.

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Windsor, Ont., Aug. 27 (CP)—After 66 years of married life, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Jackson say there are agreed marriage is a good idea. "Love one another daily—I'd say that if I were a young," said Mr. Jackson. Modern young people are not actuated by bad, but many of them do not enter marriage "seriously" enough, Mr. Jackson thought.

Sarnia, Ont., Aug. 27 (CP)—Miss Marie's Rhode Island red hen did her duty nobly the other day. The result, an egg 7 1-3 by 9 1-4 inches and weighing nearly six ounces, is on display here.

Calgary, Aug. 27 (CP)—There is not a single certified copy of the British North America Act in Canada, C. E. Johnson, Social Credit member of Parliament for Bow River, told a party rally there last night. Mr. Johnson said he had hunted in vain through the libraries of the House of Commons and the Senate in Ottawa for a certified copy of the act. The parliamentary librarian, he said, was unable to direct him to where he could find such a copy in Canada.

Laporte, Ind., Aug. 27 (AP)—Simple funeral services were held here today for Mrs. Ida Hoffman, a woman who had $18,106 in his pocket when killed by a hit-run motorist. Hundreds of persons had viewed the body, but no clue to the identity could be found.

Artillery Practice Heard Across Lake

Residents who viewed with alarm distant rumblings which occurred over last week-end and which appeared to come from the direction of Lake Ontario, need fear no longer.

A visitor from Oswego stated last night that the sounds heard came from Fort Ontario, near Oswego where regiments of American artillery are in summer training, and which were indulged in target practice. The clear stillness of last Sunday night caused the detonations of the heavy guns to be carried a considerable distance across the lake, it was stated.

120,000 TROOPS HAMMER AWAY AT 225,000 CHINESE

Japanese Struggle on Three Fronts to Crush Resistance

FLANKING BY CHINESE

'Gateway to North' Held by Chinese Against Artillery

By HALDORE HANSON

Peiping, Aug. 27 (AP)—A Japanese army of 120,000 men, encountering today at 225,000 Chinese on three points strung across the strategic railroads that radiate from North China like the spokes of a huge wheel.

Engagements were being fought on two fronts southward and northward of here and on the third, south of Tientsin, closely pressure was being applied by 70,000 Japanese against a Chinese army of 100,000.

Attempt to Crush Chinese.

Foreign military observers believe Japan's aim is to crush Chinese on all three points simultaneously depending mainly upon superior mechanized resistance at Liangliang, 25 miles southwest of Peiping, and at Nankow Pass, 30 miles northwest.

The Chinese flanking movement south of Tientsin, designed to threat 'to the 150-mile Japanese front, from 100,000 Chinese troops were pivoting around the western flank of 25,000 Japanese.

Nankow Pass Held.

At Nankow Pass, 25,000 Chinese have held up an effort of 15,000 Japanese, heavily mechanized and supported by artillery, to smash through the gateway to the north.

On the other hand, dispatches other sources of public information and reports from the north indicated the Chinese almost double the Japanese in strength, were only awaiting completion of a sweep north of the great wall to take the offensive.)

GEORGE ROSEBUSH HELD FOR THEFT

Police Allege Man Entered Garage And Stole Slot Machine

George Rosebush, 18-year-old Coe Hill resident, was arrested last night on a charge of theft, following the finding of a damaged slot machine in the vicinity of Coe Hill, Detective Sergeant Rowland said. The arrest proved the sequel to a robbery that occurred at Coe Hill on August 22nd, when the garage of Chas. Rollins was entered and a slot machine was stolen. Constables W. E. Smith and J. Palmateer, Belleville detachment of the Provincial Police, investigated the robbery yesterday and subsequently recovered the machine, abandoned in a swamp near Coe Hill. The slot machine had been broken open and the sum of $30.00 taken from it, Sergeant Rowland said.

Rosebush was arraigned before Magistrate Deroche in police court this morning and was remanded in custody of the county jail until Monday when he will face their charges on the current sitting of the court. At the time of the report the robbery it was declared the entrance to Mr. Rollins' garage had been made through a side window.

PARALYSIS PEAK NOT YET REACHED DOCTOR'S OPINION

Toronto Board of Education Delays Reopening of Schools to Sept. 13

Toronto, Aug. 27 (CP)—As a further precaution against the spread of infantile paralysis in York Township, the Board of Health today ordered all public places closed to children under 16 years.

Meanwhile Mayor W. D. Robbins of Toronto announced opposition to annual children's parade from attending the Canadian National Exhibition. Aldermen in the streets at a Board of Health meeting later today he will propose the exclusion of children at the Exhibition.

"It would be folly for us to allow 200,000 children to mingle at the Exhibition while at the same time we are keeping the schools closed to keep them out of crowds," the Alderman said.

Closing of bathing beaches, theatres, private swimming pools and other places of public assemblage to children also will be discussed at today's meeting.

Blood Given For Serum.

London, Ont., Aug. 27 (CP)—Seventy-five former sufferers from infantile paralysis—gave their blood for serum purposes at the clinic held in Victoria Hospital today.

Cases of infantile paralysis—which has totalled more than 300 cases and claimed 19 lives in Ontario in less than three months—has not reached its highest mark, Trustee Dr. J. H. Downing told the Toronto Board of Education.

With weather conditions as they are, there was no evidence abatement in the number of cases would be in the next 30 days or more, he said.

The board took additional safeguards and ordered all public and high schools remain closed to September 13 instead of September 7. Further provision that schools might be kept closed for a period from Sept. 13 if the situation warranted such action. School openings scheduled for Sept. 1, was pushed back at first to Sept. 7 because of the epidemic and last night was extended to the 13th.

The School Board further recommended to the Board of Health that children be banned from all public places, including swimming pools, playgrounds, theatres and the like. The possibility of keeping them from the Canadian National Exhibition when it opened today was also discussed but no action was taken.

185 Cases In Toronto.

Toronto had 185 cases and nine deaths from infantile paralysis in the 23 non-fatal cases during 1936. Medical science has arranged for a district press investigation and efforts to stem the epidemic and to alleviate conditions among the young in isolation hospitals and private homes. Doctors and nurses are

Industrial Production in U. K. Is Greatest Ever Recorded

British Board of Trade Journal Reports Great Activity

MANY NEW RECORDS

London, Aug. 27 (CP)—Volume of industrial production in the United Kingdom during the second quarter of 1937 was the greatest ever recorded, according to the Board of Trade Journal.

The journal reported industrial activity in the June quarter was 2.3 per cent greater than in the first quarter of 1937 and 9.1 per cent greater than in the second quarter of 1936.

Index numbers for the three periods, based on the quarterly average of 1930 as 100 were 124.7, 121.7 and 113.9 respectively.

Expansion in industrial production, the publication said, continued in the second quarter of this year. The index numbers both for manufacturing industries (140.3) and for all groups represented the greatest volume of production ever recorded for any quarter.

Manufacturing production in the second quarter was about 8½ per cent greater than in the June quarter of 1936.

Production of iron and steel goods and textiles, activity in the industries covered by the engineering and ship-building group, the non-ferrous metals and the chemical, oil, paper and factory production of food, drink and tobacco constituted records since 1927, when calculations first were made.

LOTIEN IS TURNED INTO HEAP ASHES IN BITTER BATTLE

Three Divisions of Chinese Struggle Against the Japanese

FOOTHOLD CLAIMED

3,000 Japanese Slain in a Battle at Backdoor of Shanghai

By JAMES A. MILLS

Shanghai, Aug. 27 (AP) — Three divisions of Chinese troops tonight fought desperately northwest of Shanghai to stem a Japanese charge against the back door to this city. Bombs, shells and machine gun fire turned Lotien, twelve miles northwest of Shanghai, into a smoking heap of ashes.

Near the town, waves of Japanese infantrymen met a wall of machine gun fire in a bayonet charge thrunder chimmering rice fields.

Tide of Battle Swings.

The tide of battle swung from side to side. Thousands were killed or wounded.

Japanese claimed occupation of Lotien, foothold for an advance on Kiangwan, just northwest of Shanghai proper. But the town, as such, was no more.

The 24 hours of fighting at Lotien opened with heavy artillery bombardments. Two Chinese divisions held a third line. From positions in the rear, machine guns were trained on their backs to force them to stand fast.

Bayonet Charge Made.

After continuous shelling, Japanese infantrymen first fixed bayonets and set out. Storming through machine-gun and rifle fire they met Chinese forces hand-to-hand. A Japanese company commander, leading the charge, was killed or wounded. Another Japanese officer was seriously wounded.

PRAYING MANTIS FOUND IN COURT

Held in the custody of Magistrate F. J. Lloyd, Belleville Police Court today was a praying mantis, valiant crusader for justice that lived on the floor of the court room. Christ Kidd first observed the dauntless insect and drew the attention of Crown Attorney R. C. Donnan, K.C., to its presence. "Why that is a praying mantis, sally, we should capture it and turn it over to the Dominion Entomological Bureau on Dundas Street," commanded Mr. Donnan. As Provincial Constable A. A. Stark scooped the insect into a bottle Mr. Donnan remarked: "Is this an arrest, officer?" The insect resembles a locust on sight, being used for the destruction of other insects, that destroy vegetable growth as they prey upon them.

R. O.'s ARE NAMED IN THIS DISTRICT

Floyd Ashley, Foxboro, has been named assistant training for Hastings East and J. B. Grainger, Trenton, for Hastings West. It has been announced.

Other returning officers in the district are: H. Coleman, Picton, for Prince Edward-Lennox; Samuel Johnson, Napanee, for Addington; and C. Clarence Earle, Brockville, for Leeds.

Parking a Horse

The old gentleman was puzzled. For nearly five minutes he had been trying to park the horse and buggy in a vacant parking place between two cars on Front Street.

So far he had the horse in line, but the rear part of the buggy stuck out at a sharp angle. Manipulation of the faithful Dobbin resulted in no success. He scratched his head, then a smile broke over his face.

Striding to the rear of the vehicle he stooped, grasped the axle firmly and with a mighty heave picked up the body of the buggy and aligned it alongside the curb.

That's that" he grinned, as he brushed off his hands and strode into a nearby grocery store.

Muskie Chokes On Huge Sucker

The fish choked on the one Mackenzie Fulton, of Long Point, Balaan Lake near Lindsay, tells a story how while a friend he was fishing from a boat in the lake when they noticed a large muskie floating on top of the water. It appeared to be helpless, but when the keen fisherman hauled the big one in the boat they found it to be the perfect condition, but was gasping heavily.

Examination revealed the big muskie to be gradually choking to death. It had swallowed a large sucker which was lodged in its throat.

ROSLIN

Roslin, Aug. 27. — Several ladies from here attended the East Hastings Women's Institute office rally, which was held in the Foresters' hall, Tweed, "Ivanhoe Branch" on Wednesday, August 25th.

The rally was conducted by Mrs. Clarence Hayes of the Institute Department. At noon the ladies enjoyed a pot-luck dinner.

During the afternoon Miss Miss Bell of Madoc and Mrs. Hannah gave a humorous reading which all enjoyed.

PARALYSIS PEAK

working night and day, principally in Toronto and London, centres of the outbreak.

Respirators known as "iron lungs" are in use for patients in advanced stages of the disease, those whose paralyzed muscles cannot keep their lungs functioning. A similar case was at Hamilton General Hospital, where an iron lung was received from Boston.

Into the contraption was placed a 22-year-old patient and within a few hours his condition was reported improved. The "lung" was breathing for him, giving his body a chance to battle the disease.

Absentee Has Prescribed.

Doctors prescribed absolute rest for their patients and in most cases serum was being administered. This was made from blood donated by those recovered from the disease. Fifty donors attended a clinic at Hamilton yesterday, while sixty others volunteered their blood at London.

Absence of new cases yesterday in London was in contrast to Wednesday's report when nine patients—the largest daily total since the epidemic began—were admitted to Victoria Hospital.

Dr. C. A. Harris, London, Medical Health Officer, announced last night three persons were taken to hospital for observation purposes, increasing to 44 the number either afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with the malady.

Hospital Crowded.

In order to provide more accommodation at Victoria Hospital—the only London hospital with isolation facilities—ten patients were taken from the Institute to St. Joseph's Hospital, a mile away. Additional transfers were expected today and it is hoped to clear one ward which can be converted for use of the paralysis sufferers.

All children in London have been banned from theatres and all swimming pools and playgrounds have been closed during the past week.

POLICE BLOTTER

Alleged shoplifting was reported in a local butcher shop yesterday afternoon, Belleville City Police being stolen from the counter of this city business place. Police are investigating.

According to a customer, who witnessed the entire affair, a man walked into the butcher shop and while Mr. Livesey was serving another customer, the man in question sneaked the cans of beef beneath his coat and walked slowly out of the store. Upon learning of the theft Mr. Livesey informed the police and also supplied an excellent description of the suspected person.

A transient, who gave his name as William Harrison, was arrested on a charge of intoxication last night. The man had wandered into the premises of an East Hill resident and there had fallen asleep in the rear yard.

Despite the humidity and uncomfortable sleeping conditions that have been in evidence for the past week, transients still seek sleeping quarters at the police station nightly, three, turning up last night. The door of a local business house was found insecure last night, but subsequent investigations proved no entrance had been attempted, the proprietor having forgotten to lock the door.

POLICE COURT

In the absence of Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., who is enjoying a well-earned holiday, Magistrate J. L. Lloyd, Northbrook, presided at today's session of the Belleville police court, which proved short however.

William Harrison, 23-year-old Prince Edward County farmhand who was arrested in Belleville on a charge of intoxication last night, readily admitted his guilt, today.

"I'm guilty all right, Your Honor, but could you let me get out of town? I haven't been in this court in over a year, sir," he added.

"No, that's right and when you were allowed time to pay your last fine, you failed to put in an appearance with the money," pointed out Chief Kidd to the court.

"Well, I'm working on a farm for ten dollars a month and can't pay a fine, but if you'll let me go this time I'll go back to the farm and never come in the city again," pleaded Harrison.

"All right, away you go, but remember your promise," concluded His Worship.

William Cleveland, Frankford youth, who appeared on a charge of the theft of a quantity of copper wire and lighting rods, had his case further enlarged for one week. "We have character witnesses here and are ready to proceed," protested Mr. Pringle, counsel for the accused.

"Well, the Crown hasn't its witnesses and I'm asking for a further enlargement," abruptly interrupted Mr. Donnan.

A woman with babe in arms appeared charged with fraud and conversion and pleaded guilty. "What can we do under such circumstances? We can't send a mother with a small baby to jail very well," pondered His Worship.

"Well, I understand there are other such cases pending, so I suppose we enlarge the matter also dis," suggested Mr. Donnan.

Obituary

JAMES M. GRAHAM
(Hungerford)

After an illness of one week's duration James Murray Graham, late residence Chapman's Corners in Hungerford Township, passed away at the Belleville General Hospital late on Thursday, August 26th.

The late Mr. Graham was born in Hungerford Township, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. James Graham. All his life was passed in the township where he was born and where he was engaged in farming.

In religion he was a member of Bethel United Church and highly regarded in the community. Fraternally he was a life member of the Masonic Lodge at Tweed and also a member of the Royal Orange Lodge.

Surviving him are his widow, who prior to her marriage was Miss Mary Sullivan; four daughters, Mrs. G. A. Wright, Hamilton; Mrs. R. S. Kreiner, Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. J. M. Wilkinson, Hungerford Township; Mrs. Cecil Thomas, Hungerford Township; two sons, Mr. Stanley Graham of Belleville, and Mr. Clarence Graham at home; four sisters, Mrs. Joseph Sullivan, Tweed; Mrs. Henry Lamb, Redneersville; Mrs. Avery Crouter, Carrying Place; Mrs. James Meechem, Peterboro; one half brother, Mr. Harry Meechem, Peterboro.

MISS MARGARET MONTGOMERY

Miss Margaret Montgomery, a resident of Belleville, for many years, passed away at her home in Clarke's Hill, Thursday afternoon. She had reached an advanced age.

The late Miss Montgomery was born in Rawdon Township, (Ridge Road), her parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Montgomery. She resided for a time at Stirling, before coming to Belleville, home before coming to Belleville.

Miss Montgomery was well known to many residents of this city, who, with friends regret her passing. In religion she was a member of the Presbyterian Church.

Surviving her are three nieces—Mrs. Blair, Toronto; Mrs. B. C. Donnan, Belleville and Mrs. C. G. Wright, Stirling. The funeral will take place from the residence of the latter on Saturday.

Funeral arrangement is made elsewhere in this paper.

LATE HENRY HILBORNE

The funeral of Henry Hilborne, the thirteen-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hilborne, took place from the family residence in the 1st concession of Ameliasburg Township, Prince Edward County, on Thursday afternoon. The service in the home and at the graveside in Albury Cemetery was conducted by Adjutant H. S. Alderman of the Salvation Army, Belleville, assisted by Commissioner B. R. Frederick of Redneersville.

The bearers were Bernard Garbutt, Jack Elliott, Gerald Thompson, Gordon Alpra, Harold Russell and Douglas Howes.

LATE WALTER T. LINGHAM

Thursday afternoon the funeral of Walter Thomas Lingham took place from his late residence, 204 Dundas Street East. The Rev. D. T. McClintock, pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church, conducted the service in the home and at Belleville Cemetery where interment was made in the family plot.

The bearers were Mr. S. S. McKeown, Mr. W. J. Cook, Mr. W. N. Selair, Mr. O. H. Scott, Mr. A. H. Ketchesen and Mr. J. V. Doyle.

MISS MARY A. DONOGHUE

The death of Miss Mary Agnes Donoghue, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Donoghue, 161 William Street, Belleville, which occurred at Hamilton, early this Friday morning, August 27th, has brought deep feelings of regret to many friends in this city and much sympathy is entertained for the family in their bereavement.

The late Miss Donoghue was born at Belleville and resided here until she entered St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, to train for the profession of nursing. She was proficient in her work and upon graduation she remained upon the hospital nursing staff for sometime. She attained to the standing of Registered Nurse. For some time she had been in failing health and had been residing in Hamilton.

During her residence here the late Miss Donoghue was a devout member of St. Michael's Church, and took an active interest in the Sodality of Children of Mary in connection with the parish.

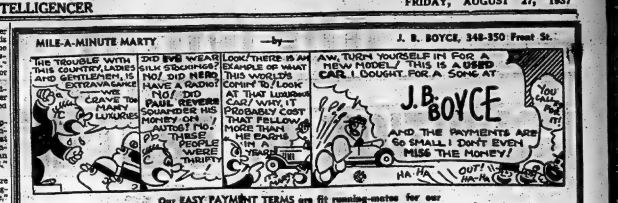
Surviving her are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Donoghue; two brothers, Mr. D. H. Donoghue, of Mr. Godfrey Donoghue, both of Belleville; two sisters, Miss Teresa Donoghue and Miss Margaret Donoghue both, at home.

The funeral announcement will be made later.

JOHN MORLAND

West Huntingdon — Hastings county's oldest resident in the person of John Morland passed away at the home of his son, Charles Morland, on Monday, August 23, 1937. The late Mr. Morland had reached his 100th year in February and up until recently had enjoyed fairly good health.

His funeral which was largely attended was held at Fuller, (Knox) Church, of which Mr. Morland was a life long member. Pastor the Rev. Mr. McDonald conducting services at church and graveside.



The bearers were Messrs. Ben Brough, John Green, Jas. Wilson, Charles Miller, Chester Adams and Harry Redcliffe.

Left to mourn his loss are two sons—Charles of Moira and Murray of Fuller and Mrs. Thomas Rollins of Fuller.

VERA KATHLEEN SNELGROVE

Picton—Sorrowing relatives and friends attended the funeral service at the home of Mr. James May, Washburn Street, on Wednesday afternoon of Vera Kathleen Snelgrove, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Snelgrove of Hagloe, Ameliasburgh. Her mother was before her marriage, Miss Pearl Welsh of Picton. Rev. S. M. Scott spoke words of comfort to the bereaved family. Among those attending the funeral were Mrs. Mabel Lynch of New York City and Mrs. Jack Welsh of Pennsylvania, uncle and aunt of the deceased. Interment was made in Glenwood Cemetery.

PARALYSIS DEATHS NOW REACH 19

Two Deaths And Ten New Cases Reported at Toronto

(By The Canadian Press)

Three deaths in the Toronto district raised the list of infantile paralysis victims to 19 today as Public Health officials were confronted with evidence the epidemic in Ontario continued to spread. Twenty-nine new cases were reported at Toronto and London—chief centres of the outbreak—yesterday.

Ten new cases were reported in Toronto today along with two deaths. The third Toronto district death was a Markham youth who died last night in the town 15 miles northeast of this city.

Kingston Delays Opening

Kingston, alarmed at the appearance of a single case, decided to leave its schools closed until Sept. 7, as London and Toronto already had decided to do. London's Medical Health Officer, Dr. C. A. Harris, asked clergymen to co-operate by keeping Sunday School classes closed the next two Sundays.

Object of the precautions was to keep children from congregating in numbers, thus preventing possible spread of the disease. At Brantford, however, the Board of Health decided against postponement of school opening on the ground the children would be as safe in school as playing in groups throughout the city. Brantford had one positive and one suspected case.

London Hospital Crowded

London's Victoria Hospital had only eight vacant beds in the isolation ward after nine new cases sent the total of positive cases to 41. Under the London Academy of Medicine, 250 doctors and nurses met last night and heard Medical Health experts stress the importance of administering serum to victims during the first 24 hours.

A 21-year-old Hamilton resident and a Dundas child were under treatment at Hamilton, the two new cases raising the total in Hamilton to 15. Toronto has had 178 cases since the disease made its appearance in early June and the total for the province rose above the 200 mark.

Two Deaths in Toronto

Toronto, Aug. 26 (CP)—Two persons died here from infantile paralysis within the last 24 hours, bringing the total number of deaths since the outbreak of the epidemic to nine, the Health Department reported today. One person died last night and the second early today.

Ten new cases were reported to health authorities today, bringing the Toronto total to 185. To-date the cases extra nurses were employed. Some members of the Hospital for Sick Children staff were working 18 hours daily to combat the disease, H. W. Bower, superintendent said.

Third Case in Peterborough

Peterborough, Ont., Aug. 26 (CP) —Third case of infantile paralysis in Peterborough district, Miss Laidlaw, Toronto, was removed to the home today of her sister-in-law on Stoney Lake suffering the disease. She was stricken by Dr. C. T. Cooper Cole, Toronto.

Toronto, Aug. 26 (CP)—Dr. H. A. Scheib, Ontario Deputy Minister of Health, today said that as far as the Provincial Department of Health was concerned, "there will be no censorship on infantile paralysis."

Dr. McCabe who conferred all morning with Health officials, added: "In fact we intend to undertake through the press an intensive program of education. A committee of competent Department officials will immediately undertake the preparation of a series of releases devoid of public of symptoms and other pertinent facts. There will be no putting the lid on."

BRITISH LIVES WILL BE GUARDED

London, Aug. 26 (GP-Havas) — Continued protection for British interests in the Far East and in the Mediterranean was promised today after a meeting of Prime Minister Chamberlain, Foreign Secretary Eden, Sir Robert Vansittart, permanent Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and Viscount Halifax, Lord President of the Council.

An official communique outlining results of the conversations said the statesmen decided "all practicable measures would be taken to protect British lives and property in Shanghai."

"The British government," the communique said, "shares the anxiety of the United States government as to damages to the Far East generally from the present fighting, and welcome the appeal made by the American Secretary of State (Cordell Hull) to both sides to cease hostilities."

It added a wish that close collaboration with the United States, French and other governments should continue.

UNDECLARED WARS

Two wars have been undeclared wars, the Ethiopian and the Sino-Japanese and may set a precedent. Incidentally among nations of war what is the use of such a formal nicety out of the heraldry of the past as a declaration of war, particularly when viewed in the light of modern inventions which can profit greatly by a surprise before the old time style of war declaration could bring nations face to face? It used to be the part of gentility among nations to set a day or an hour when hostilities would begin. But the very modern nations don't do it. Why? There may be several reasons.

Perhaps even this bluntness, this scrapping of the old time courtesies as they might be called, may be the heralds of many new notions in war. In reality it may mark the advent of that time when war shall be recognized in all its horror as the arch foe of humanity and the worst relic of primitive man, intensified by the invention of the modern scientific mind.

Christian Science Monitor referring to the seeming reluctance to declare war today hints that this may be a sign of the "recognition of the pressure of an increasingly civilized attitude that questions the morality of going to war at all. Legality, it says, must be confronted so that morality may be flattered. But even in such a poor compliment the world's growing disgust with war finds unmistakable phrasing."

So is this a bowing to the modern hatred of war? Or can it be that nations score such time-honored declarations?

Wars now have been raging in the past two years, the Ethiopian, the Spanish and now the Oriental war. In all these so far the world stood on the sidelines and armaments have been strengthened to a point when the load of armaments presents a staggering problem. The armament race is near an end it is predicted, and with it comes the fear of what will follow. One main hope lies in the opposition to war of a number of states, another the might of Britain in her renewed strength put on because swords rattled until the British people were wearied of the noise abroad.

Another hope is that no nation today goes into war with banners flying and the soldiers escorted on their way with garlands of flowers. The world has too much of death and garlands of thoughts about the slain in war to think lightly of it.

CHURCH AND ADULT EDUCATION

There is a growth of feeling that the churches cannot carry on without aid to the adult. There has been a great stressing of aid to the rising generation and too much cannot be done in that cause for the age that is facing this rising generation is a peculiar age, the like of which has not been seen in history. The younger age requires guidance. But at a meeting of church leaders in New York the thought was expressed that the Christian Church cannot afford to wait for the rising generation to come and save the world but must take an active part in the adult education movement. This gathering adopted a program urging that every denomination set up an adult section in its national department of religious education to carry out the function of the church in adult education; that this section should cooperate with all agencies in this field and sympathize with all constructive work both secular and religious which is being done for the common good; that leaders for this work should be trained. It was claimed that it inefficiencies in the adult education programs of the churches had resulted in the impoverishment of any elements in community living.

MONUMENT WITHOUT A TOMB

New York Times supports the attitude of President Roosevelt in vetoing the bill providing $500,000 for the erection of a permanent memorial to Will Rogers at Claymore, Oklahoma., in co-operation with the State of Oklahoma. The Times in supporting this stand says: "The President was quick to say in the message that it shared in full measure the admiration and affection which the fellow-countrymen of Will Rogers everywhere accorded him, but that as one who knew the depth of the love of Will Rogers for mankind, and especially the devotion to children, he would himself suggest that the nation's contribution should be transmuted into 'something that would carry joy and gladness into the hearts of those he left behind.'

ENNUI

I am tired of woman, man and friend,
I am tired of living the common trend—
I want to be free to live, and spend
My days near the bowl of the sky.

I am tired of love and its jealous wrath
And the mocking sting of its aftermath—
I want to climb up some mountain path
Where only the eagles fly.

I want to build in my great unkown,
A little log cabin to call my own
Fashioned from trees only God has known
Grew in that hidden spot;

And there'd be a lake whose placid blue
Would reflect the trees and the mountains, too...
The loveliest place that man e'er knew
Or a thinker ever thought.

And I'd hunt my meat with a heart all-kind...
Killing but what I needed—not all I'd find—
And I'd pledge my heart to the mountain wind
Sweeping the peaks of the earth.

And I'd build anew the faith I had
When I was a simple country lad—
And separate all the good from bad
And sadness from clean mirth.

And there in the midst of the virgin air,
I'd breathe each day till my body was bare
Of civilization's boredom and care
And greedy, useless gain.

And I'd make my peace with Almighty God,
As I tramped the trails of the mountain sod,
And I'd tread the ways Adam should have trod....
In my land of Beginning Again.

ANY REFERENCE TO TRISTAN DA CUNHA IS ALWAYS INTERESTING, and this little island in the South Atlantic ocean 1,500 miles west and a little south of Capetown, is again on the map—this time the map of the Strategic Board of the Royal Air Force, which will utilize the island as an air base.

Tristan, which was garrisoned by a relief riment for St. Helena, at the time Napoleon was exiled there 120 years ago, and is principally peopled today by descendants of the members of that regiment, was almost lost sight of for a century until the sorry plight of its inhabitants inspired sympathetic stories in the press of the world. When the news of the project of the R.A.F. was printed, Adrian Seligman, the Rio de Janeiro correspondent of the New Chronicle of London, was dispatched to Tristan. His report of his visit reads, in part, as follows:

"We were the first to tell them they had been a change of kings in England.

"Peter Green, the 104-year-old Mrs. Repetto, a great-grandmother and chief woman of the island, told of King George VI's accession, said: "His father was always good to us. Our duty is to stand by Tristan and hold it for the Empire.'

"First letter opened by the Rev. Harold Wilde, vicar, schoolmaster, magistrate, administrator and doctor of the island, was an income tax demand.

"The population numbers 187. In the last three years there has been only one death, and that was due to an accident. In the same period there were twelve births.

"Seven surnames suffice for the whole population—Glass, Rogers, Green, Swain, Hodges, Repetto and Lavarello. Families with the last two names are descendants of Italian shipwrecked sailors who settled on the island.

"The Rev. Harold Wilde describes Tristan as an 'island of opportunity.'

"'It is untrue to say we are starving,' he says. 'We have a good surplus of last year's provisions in hand. In five years we shall be self-supporting. We only require a fishing cutter and a larger boat for inter-island communication. Our duty is to stand by Tristan, which would make a valuable South Atlantic base for an enemy power.'

"The islanders hope that it may become a refueling station for a Buenos Aires-Capetown Airway. The island is officially recommended, owing to its abundant water power, as a meteorological station with wireless communication."

"ALL-BRAN LIVES UP TO REPUTATION"

If you are troubled with common constipation, read Miss Bundy's enthusiastic letter:

"I used to feel poorly all the time—just down and out. After reading an advertisement about ALL-BRAN, I got a box. It has helped me ever since."—Miss Mary Bundy (address on request).

Laboratory tests show that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN contains bulk to exercise the intestines; vitamin B to tone up the nerves; iron.

Within the body, ALL-BRAN absorbs twice its weight in water. This soft mass gently clears the intestines in a safe, natural way —without any of the weakening action of pills and drugs.

Just eat two tablespoonfuls daily —with every meal, if you're constipated. Serve as a cereal with milk or fruits, or cook into recipes. Remember—ALL-BRAN is a food—not a medicine. Sold by all the grocery store. Made by Kellogg in London.

HONOURABLE EARL ROWE
States His Party's Stand on Labor

The national policy of the Liberal-Conservative Party, Provincial and Dominion, for many years has been to create industry for the purpose of providing work and wages for labor and a profitable home market for the farmer; the lumberman and other primary producers. The Party's sympathetic attitude towards labor is evidenced by the Social legislation on our statute books.

The Liberal-Conservative Party believes that labor should receive a fair share of the fruits of industry and is entitled to organise in order to improve the lot of the worker as regards wages, hours, security in old age and all other conditions of industrial life. The Liberal-Conservative Party reaffirms its traditional policy of insisting upon the maintenance of law and order in all industrial disputes and pledges itself firmly and scrupulously to uphold the laws of Canada.

The Liberal-Conservative Party in Ontario stands for the following:

1. The right of employees to bargain collectively through their own representatives chosen without dictation, coercion or intimidation.

2. It is and has for many decades been a fact that both capital and labor are International in their organization. Accordingly the right of the worker to belong to the union of his choosing, Canadian or International, craft or industrial, is fully established; provided always that the unions must observe, and that capital must observe, in all their actions, the laws of Canada.

3. The Liberal-Conservative Party is unalterably opposed to any attempt to inject into the minds of sit-down strikes, sabotage or other violations of our law, and for the purpose of clarity hereby places itself on record as being opposed to such illegalities whether they are introduced into Ontario by labor unions affiliated with the C. I. O., the A. F. of L., or any other organization, capital or labor.

4. That representatives from other countries, both of capital and labor, shall be subject on the same principles as other people to our immigration laws and that they shall when admitted to this country, strictly observe the laws of the land.

5. The primary function of the state in all industrial disputes is FIRST—to take no sides and to maintain law and order without the dignity of unnecessary or provocative forces, and SECOND, to enact and impartially administer adequate legislation for the conciliation of industrial disputes.

6. The right to work in Canada is not dependent upon membership in any organization.

7. That no strike shall take place until all reasonable methods of conciliation are exhausted and the worker should have the right of secret ballot free from improper influence or coercion in all decisions relating to the dispute.

8. The Liberal-Conservative Party will continue in the future as in the past to defend the principle of freedom of association within the law. The party re-affirms its belief that the essence of democracy is trust in the people and to rely on freedom and not in dictatorship, that public opinion may be led but not driven and that the greatest safeguard of orderly progress and reform is the sound common sense of all classes of the Canadian people.

I have stated frankly and fearlessly my party's policy toward labor and law enforcement. I stand now, as always, for law and order, for all, under all circumstances. This policy is the time honored British method and I shall apply these principles in the administration of our provincial affairs.

Earl Rowe.

NEW TWO - YEAR COURSE AT O. A. C. FOR FARM YOUTHS

Free Tuition And Reduced Board Among Appealing Features of Course

A new course in agriculture designed specially to meet the needs of farmers' sons who intend to make farming their life work will commence Sept. 20th at the O.A.C., Guelph. The course covers a two-year period and has been carefully prepared by Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, and James B. Fairbairn, Deputy Minister of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, in conjunction with Dr. G. I. Christie, President of the O.A.C., and the college staff.

"I am particularly desirous of seeing an increased number of two-year students attending the O.A.C. during the coming year," stated Hon. Duncan Marshall in announcing the course. "In order to encourage farm boys who find it difficult to pay their expenses at an institution of this kind, we have this year reduced the board for two-year students from $3.50 to $2.50 per week. In addition, there will be no tuition fees for this particular course." Mr. Marshall pointed out that agricultural education is never finished, and that the instruction given at the college would fit farm boys for future years on the farm.

Dr. G. I. Christie, in discussing the new course, was most enthusiastic. "Each year, hundreds of young men leave school before they have completed their education," he said. "In some cases they are required at home to assist in farm work. Illness and other reasons can be offered for many others who now find themselves on farms without the training they desire." This new two-year course which opens in September and closes on April 14th, 1937, permits students up to the age of 20 years to attend the short course. Students must be 16 years of age or over to enter the course.

Dr. Christie pointed out that members of the O.A.C. staff would be present at the O.A.C. tooth, West Annex of the Coliseum, Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, to give any information regarding the course or other courses at the O.A.C. The same information can also be obtained by writing direct to Dr. G. I. Christie, O.A.C., Guelph, Ont.

BABY STAMPEDE SLATED FOR FAIR

Competition This Year is Set For Wednesday, Sept. 1st

There may be a Baby Stampede at the Belleville Fair this year. Arrangements for the number of series in the annual Baby Show competition are being made and in Belleville will put in an appearance in this featured competition. The Secretary, R. H. Ketcheson, reports that more are entered than in any previous year, and there is still time left for mothers to register their babies.

The Baby Show will take place at three o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, September 1st at the Grandstand. And if the show lives up to the reputation of previous events of this kind at Belleville Fair the judges will have a very difficult time deciding the fate of the better babies, so healthy and sturdy are those who compete.

They arrive in prams, and in arms, but none on foot, as the age limit being twelve months, the Baby Show entries do very little long distance walking. A few years ago, negotiated, it is true, but these are of the wavering type, and not for exhibition purposes.

The show is divided into two classes, with prizes for boys and girls in both divisions—babies under six months, and those over six months and under twelve months. An additional prize is presented to the best pair of twins under twelve months.

Parties interested in seeing something extra special in babyhood should try and find a place around the bandstand on the afternoon of the Fair when the very, very young set on parade.

NEW MIDWAY RIDES AT BELLEVILLE FAIR

Many people are interested in the Midway of the Fall Fair, and for these, Belleville Fair management has provided a new Midway with all the attractions peculiar to a Midway, rides, shows, etc., and promise two new rides, presented for the first time anywhere that have been and never seen in Belleville before, said to be the last word in entertainment and amusement. Everybody who visits the Fair visits the Midway and this year's amusement road promises to produce many surprises. The Midway is on the way and will be placed in position Monday with all its brilliant bunting. Its blaring bands, bustling barkers, the tallest man in the world, and the littlest lady, the biggest beef and the smallest pony, the fat lady, the snake charmer, and all the many odd-and-even things which go to make up a modern Midway.

Weddings

PERRY—PARRY

A quiet ceremony was solemnized at the Myrtle United Church parsonage 3.00 p.m. on Wednesday, August 25th, when Miss Marjory Aletha Parry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Parry, Rickney Township, was united in marriage to Arthur Percy, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Perry of Mossey Township. The bride who was attractively attired in a gown of flowered chiffon, was unattended. The officiating minister was Rev. W. E. Mossey. After a honeymoon trip to points in Western Ontario and the United States, the happy couple will reside near Trenton in Hungry County.

KENNEDY—MACKEY

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at Trinity Anglican Church, Frankford, on Saturday afternoon, when Hilda Mixon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. McLaren, became the bride of Mr. Wm. Kennedy, of Campbellford. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. G. McConnell, rector of the church.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, looked charming in a bridal gown of white silk net over taffeta and her veil of white tulle was held in place with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of Ophelia roses.

Miss Lois Heath acted as maid of honor, and wore a fitted gown of sunrise blue taffeta with matching picture hat. Miss Isabel Tallman rose. Miss Jessie Kennedy and Miss Ruth Mackey, sister and niece of the groom were bridesmaids. They were pastel shades of flowered chiffon over taffeta, with large picture hats and carried nosegays of Ophelia roses. Rachael Bristow, Mr. Donald MacLaren, brother of the bride acted as best man. EAST HASTINGS W. I. SPONSORS OFFICERS' RALLY

Mrs Clarence Hayes of Georgetown is Special Speaker

August 26th was a very bright and enjoyable day in more ways than one for the women of East Hastings District Women's Institute, when twenty-six meetings from six different branches met at the Front Road United Church with Mrs. Clarence Hayes of Georgetown, Instructor, sent from the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

The President of the District, Mrs. W. White of Roslin, opened the meeting.

Business to be discussed was the place of meeting of the local leaders training school on November the 8th, 9th.

Moved by Mrs. Conner, we hold training school at Tyendinaga Mast Mohawk alternative It was later decided to hold the training school in November at Mrs. Harvey's home, Marysville.

All joined in community singing, Mrs. White introduced the speaker, Mrs. Hayes, who won all with her lovely friendly dispositions.

Members are very grateful to Miss McDermand, superintendent of Women's Institutes for sending to them women like Mrs. Hayes, Miss Collins and others. It has been a great pleasure to meet with them, discuss problems and receive the help they so willingly give.

Mrs. Hayes opened her address with a few kindly words of thanks and appreciation for flowers and said while the group might seem small to us from seven branches, it is not always the large group that are the most profitable.

The aim said is a training school for leaders, a rally, a discussion group, a conference group. Each one is free to take part, and ask questions. Fixed finances of branch and district also expenditures of same were dealt with.

Mrs. Hayes thought the home the ideal placeto hold meetings in rather than a noisy cheering hall.

Mrs. Hayes discussed publicity pointing out it was necessary to create interest in the community in which the branch is organized, expenses of district and branches and recreation and social life which play a good part in the Institute work as it helps to bring all together in a friendly way and opens a wider field for labor.

In the afternoon session Miss Miss Bell gave a comic reading which was much appreciated. Mrs. Murphy asked for a thrift exhibit for the area convention which is to be held in the city hall on Sept. 9th and 10th. Mrs. Hayes spoke of the many things which could be made from the fruit and sugar sack.

Mrs. Hayes also referred to the local leader training schools. This is a good work and very worthwhile. The local leader's way should be paid by the branch she represents. Continuing he address, Mrs. Hayes stressed the fact that in raising funds for the Institute members should be very careful The selling of tickets is not a good way.

The Institutes have grown so," "said the speaker, "the eyes of the world are on us. We must try always to do the right, to keep all our activities from those things which can be criticized. Branch problems were discussed.

Mrs. Hayes spoke of the co-operation programme and asked that members take time to study it at the annual meeting touching on the buymanship, which enables us to get the best value for money expended; and nutrition upon which the health of the entire family rests.

Parliamentary procedure was then explained. Mrs. Hayes explained very thoroughly resolutions and elections, especially the duties of nominating committee.

"Mothers and how to conduct themf" was then discussed and a demonstration put on by Mrs. Murphy, Mrs. McLaren and others. At the hour to close Mrs. Hayes spoke a few words of encouragement to the members of the branches and wished all every success in their work.

Mrs. Murphy moved a vote of thanks to Mrs. Hayes for her untiring efforts to assist the members and all hoped to continue a friendship that started but very near to all.

The meeting was closed by all singing the National Anthem.

Those registering at the Orders were: Mrs. A. Sills, Mrs. Clara S. Hill, Mohawk branch; Mrs. Ella Ahbee, Quinte branch; Mrs. S. Anderson, Quinte branch; Mrs. Clarence Brant, Mohawk branch; Miss M. Bell, Mrs. M. Bell, Mrs. Eva M. Brant, Mohawk branch; Mrs. H. Dewarix, Quinte branch; Mrs. Geo. Conner, Quinte branch; Mrs. Ida Brant, Mohawk branch; Mrs. H. Gilp, Quinte branch; Mrs. Noble Brown, Quinte branch; Mrs. Cassandilla, Quinte branch; Mrs. Wm. Gillespie, Roslin branch; Mrs. Harry Hill, Roslin branch; Miss L. Wilson, Roslin branch; Miss Lillie Wrose, Melrose branch; Miss Helen Brown, Quinte branch; Mrs. R. A. Reid, Quinte branch; Mrs. Maurice Reid, Quinte branch; Mrs. Ralph Harvey, Tyendinaga East; Mrs. R. McMath, Tyendinaga East; Mrs. Tufts, Phillipston Elon; Mrs. Clarke, Phillipston Elon; Mrs. Harry Murray, Melrose; Mrs. G. McLaren, Melrose; Mrs. W. White, Roslin.

PLAINFIELD W.M.S.

The August meeting of Plainfield W.M.S. was held at the home of Mrs. Edmund Carleton with an attendance of fifteen. The President, Mrs. Elliott opened the meeting in the usual way. Miss Annie Hamilton had charge of the Devotional service. Roll Call was answered by a verse of Scripture. Mrs. Carleton gave the Study Book, charge. A hymn was sung. A reading by Mrs. C. Beatty and a solo by Mrs. Everson were much enjoyed by Mrs. Eric Denyes gave a reading and spoke very highly of Miss Hunt.

A reading was given by Miss Margaret Carleton. This part of the meeting was closed with prayer by Mrs. Everson. A reading was given by Mrs. Everson on "Temperance and a letter was read from Mrs. Farnsworth.

The meeting closed with prayer by Mrs. H. Harrison.

A delicious lunch was served and a social half hour spent.

REDNERSVILLE W.I.

The August meeting of the Rednersville Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. W. H. Moore, on Thursday, August 19th., this being the girls' meeting. The meeting opened by singing of the Ode, followed by all repeating the Lord's Prayer. The Roll Call was answered by "The Girl's Place is in the Home".

It was decided that the Institute have a miscellaneous exhibit at the Area convention. It was moved that Mrs. Earl Onderdonk be the delegate for the Area Convention at Belleville and Mrs. Alex. Gilmore be the alternate. Community singing was then enjoyed, Mrs. Kathleen Giles assisting at the piano.

Misses Fairman of "Mountain View, then followed with a piano duet. A paper on "Tea wisely and not too well", was well given by Mrs. Eric Thompson. Miss Frances Wallbridge gave a piano solo which was much appreciated. The girls of Mountain View then gave a demonstration on a well equipped clothes closet, which was much enjoyed.

Mrs. Montgomery gave a talk on girls' work which was very interesting. This brought a pleasant afternoon to a close all repeating the Mizpah Benediction. A delicious lunch was served.

A vote of thanks was then given to Mrs. Montgomery and Kathleen for opening their home and to those who helped on the program also the girls preparing the lunch.

ASSISTANT PRIEST AT CATHEDRAL

Rev. Gerald E. Graham, Formerly of Belleville, Goes to Hamilton

Brockville, August 26.—Announcement to the effect the Rev. Gerald E. Graham, L. Th., rector of the parish of Leeds Near for the past three years, had been appointed assistant priest of Christ church cathedral in Hamilton, effective October 1, was received with delight by the young clergyman's many friends in Brockville, proving as it does a prediction made some years ago that he would enjoy continued success in the service of the Anglican church in Canada. Dear to his parishioners of St. Luke's, Lyndhurst, St. Peter's, Seeley's Bay, and St. John's, Leeds, it aroused sorrow at the thought they will soon bid farewell to one they have honored and revered since he started his Holy labors among them. Active in the performance of his parochial duties, he endeared himself in the hearts of all, and their sorrow at parting soon to part with him is somewhat lifted by the knowledge the change means promotion and that in his new field of endeavour he will have wider scope for the diffusion of those principles which a great and good church stands for.

Born in Brockville, on April 23, 1907, only child of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Graham, 79 James street west, young Gerald was a lively student in the public schools and collegiate institute, not only in his studies but in athletics as well. Before matriculating from the collegiate institute he decided upon the ministry in the church in which his forbears at all times were keenly interested. He entered Trinity College, University of Toronto, in 1927, graduating with honors in 1932. He served as student missioner at Bannockburn and as assistant at St. Alban's cathedral, St. John's Garrison church, and St. Mary the Virgin church, all three located in Toronto, before his graduation. His first charge following graduation was at the Bellerilay mission, where he officiated as rector until 1934, when Bishop Lyon invited him to take charge of the three churches in Leeds Near, which he is now leaving for more important duties in the Ambitious City.

Rev. Mr. Graham's career at Toronto University was marked by the winning of the English scholarship. During his course he also was editor of Trinity Review, the college newspaper, and was a representative of the college on the inter-faculty debating team. He was the first Canadian delegate to the College of Preachers at Washington in 1936.

That he will bring honor and dignity to the new office to which he has just been appointed goes without saying, and as removal to the scene of another sphere of ministerial duties he will be followed by the best wishes of hosts of friends not only in his native town, but throughout the Diocese of Ontario as well.

Bawden Effective in Pinches As Corbins Defeat Peterboro

Locals Take First Game in "A" Playdowns by 12-7

HEAVY HITTING

While Johnnie Bawden was restricting the opposition to six scattered hits the Belleville Corbin Locks clubbed the Peterboro Westclox hurler for 16 safeties, many for extra base hits to give the Belleville Corbins a clean-cut 12 to 7 victory over the Peterboro in the first game of the first round intermediate "A" playdowns in the O.A.A. at the Park Crescent last evening.

Coming from behind with a fifth and sixth inning rally, that netted them eight big runs, the Corbins wielded heavy and potent bats that saw a barrage of slingtail lose his ring out, including three circuit blows. Johnnie Bawden was in the mound for the Corbins and although his control was somewhat shaky at times and he walked six; Bawden was seen to bear down in the clutches and he struck out six, the majority of which came, when most needed. His effort in the second frame, when he walked three and struck out three, was unique. Tommy Pearce, the visiting roundsman, was hit hard by the Corbins' relentless, three home runs a triple and a double being included in the 14 hits garnered by the locals.

Bawden, Cook, Hitting Stars

Bawden and Cook shared the batting honors of the day, each getting a single, a double and a circuit blow. Barrage and Whalen counted a brace of safeties each, while St. Louis hit for three bases two account for two runs in the initial frame. Dormer and Starr had two hits each, Starr blasting a homer in the ninth, with one aboard while Kearns hit a triple in the initial frame, but died on the doorsteps. The visitors one-played the Corbins defensively, however, and kicked in with two lightning-fast double plays, both of which assisted in keeping the Belleville score down.

Belleville scored three in the first, but were two runs astern in the fifth, by virtue of a three run splurge staged by the Westclox in the fifth, after scoring one each in the third and fourth. Singles by Todd, Cook, Bawden and Barrage and a mammoth home run by Rigby gave the Corbins five runs in their half of the fifth and they added three more in the next frame as the result of hits by Cook, Hanna, Barrage and Whalen. Cook also hit a home run in the initial frame. Bawden hit for the circuit in the eighth, while Starr blasted a home run, with Dormer aboard, in the Peterboro's half of the ninth. Some fine defensive ball was seen, especially the result of numerous running catches in the outfield. Every member of the Corbin hit safely except Ethier.

The Corbins play the second game of the series in Peterboro this evening.

The line-ups—Belleville Corbin Locks—Cook ss; Ethier 3b; Reid 1b; Rigby rf; St. Louis cf; Hanna lf; Bawden p; Barrage 2b and Whalen c. Peterboro Westclox—P. Challice c; Dormer 2b; Kearns rf; P. Challice ss; Starr 3b; Playford and Curry cf; O'Leary lf; Ellis lb and Parsons p.

Score by innings:

	R. H. E.
Peterboro 0 0 1 1 3 0 0 0 3—7	6 2
Belleville 3 0 0 0 5 2 1 0 1—12	16 3

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Brietz)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 27.—(AP)—This makes twice the old Almanac from which pitch he's fight dates has done Mike Jacobs dirt.

There has been no fight pitched so far this season. . . . Isn't that a record? . . . Ruby York, who had six knockouts in five days for the Tigers, struck out the first and only time he appeared in the Tiger lineup in 1934.

A Southern writer says virtually every Major League manager except Connie Mack, Joe McCarthy and Charlie Grimm is worrying about his job next season. . . . Only you just picture Bill Terry and smart old Bill McKechnie losing a lot of sleep these nights! . . . The thrifty Tommy Farr canned all his sparring partners the minute he quit training the other day and now has to recruit a new lot. We have until us today Ben Shalon, heavyweight wrestling champion of Palestine and a good one, too, by his stack of clippings, all written in Yiddish, is any indication.)

Wonder how Mike Jacobs figures the Saratoga race mob will boost the Farr-Louis ticket sales the way the Saratoga boys boosted Gene Tunney? . . . Don't see how that limit applies to the experts who are out there on Louis.

ERNIE HUGHSON AGAINST PERNOKIS

Lion of North to Tackle McLachlan in Semi-Final Bout

There will be plenty to rave about at the Arena tonight when Peter Pernokis, the Greek flash meets Ernie Hughson, dusky maman in the main bout of one of the best cards ever offered to the fandom of the city and district. Hughson, it will be remembered, is the guy who pinned the boys and gals with a novel thrill last week when he left the unconscious body of Jim Tincoski lying prone on the mat after the application of his "unconscious hold". Tincoski heard the bloodies sing and what not after a few seconds of this particular grip and was carried unceremoniously out of the ring by his sunburned opponent.

Wild Phidina, the Lion of the North, is growling in his lair and is all ready to strut his stuff against Mclachlan, Brooklyn Scot. The door one has no use for jungle-tactics and says he will put a kink in the Lion's tail, that will make it look like a corkscrew. Fiddina, however has yet to meet with defeat in a local ring, and is already proud of his record intact.

Sunny O'Day, will represent the chamber of Gold Cleland in the preliminary against Smith Harcastle, Scarboro maman. The Irish lad has yet to be made say uncle and will give his opposition a tough argument.

ENGLISH REFEREE THINKS FARR A GOOD HEAVYWEIGHT

(By Gayle Talbot)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Aug. 27.—(AP)—Turns out there's another fellow around who doesn't think Tommy Farr got a raw deal. Johnny Wood, the referee Mike Jacobs imagined he detected rain in the air yesterday morning.

What Jacobs actually smelled, when he asked permission to call Welshman's engagement with heavyweight champion Joe Louis Monday night at Yankee Stadium, was, of course, some fresh money coming down the pipe. Only this week end on the racing specials. This scrap needs some fresh money.

That, though, has nothing to do with Wood, the Texan who is the active dean of British fight referees and as such knows considerable about British fighters. He says, without batting an eye, that the Welshman is the best all-round heavyweight England has produced in the last 30 years, at least."

Farr Not a Puncher

He doesn't contend that that necessarily makes Farr a good fighter, but only says it makes the battle-scarred challenger good enough to fight Joe Louis if only the campus for 15 innings and very possibly win the world's championship by decision.

"I won't try to kid you that he's a puncher," he said in confession, while watching Farr pull his clothes on after yesterday's shortened weighing-in. "I've been in the ring with him 12 times, I think, and I don't remember that he knocked any of them silly with one blow. I think I'd say that he didn't do any of them any good. Most of them got cut up.

"But I don't know how hard this Louis hits. Maybe he's the hardest single puncher of all time, like they say. But these odds they're quoting on him to beat Farr—I to 1—are perfectly ridiculous.

Farr was listening in on this part of the talk, but showed no agreement.

Yesterday is the fastest heavyweight England has produced in my time," Thomas continued, "I honestly believe he could have whipped Dempsey, who fought Tunney at Philadelphia."

Dean Developes a Sore Arm Leaving Team for St. Louis Takes Chance of Team for Flag

Without Dizzy One, Cards Are Just Another Ball Club

YANKEES IN

All National League Games Except One Off Because of Rain

By SID FEDER
Associated Press Sports Writer

Bill Terry and Charley Grimm, a couple of guys who are about as chummy as the Japs and Chinese, had one thing in common today.

Neither could shed any tears over the fact that Dizzy Dean was on the way back to St. Louis with a sore "Soupbone" that may keep him off the firing line for a month or so, put the Cardinals' National League pennant hopes in the ash can.

And Frankie Frisch, the Cardinals, who has no love of roses, either—the Gas House Gang being what it is—found a couple of new gray hairs, when he spied the comb to his scalp this morning.

Without Diz in them, the Cards have as much chance against Grimm's Cubs and Terry's Giants as a girlish steak with a pack of hungry dogs.

So, when Dizzy served Leo Norris with a two base ball to open the Cards' game with the Phillies yesterday, and then announced his right arm was on the fritz, dark clouds overhead landed right in Frisch's lap. On the way down, they washed the second game of a scheduled doubleheader, after the Phils took the opener, 8-5.

Yankees Almost in

Since every day he's away hands the Cards' chances another clout on the chin, the Messrs. Grimm and Terry heaved a mutual sigh of relief. Both outfits had a day off yesterday, with old man weather washing out everything in the circuit but the Phils-Cards clash, so both had a double job on hand today.

The American League landslide, on the other hand, begins to look more and more like one of those things as the days slip past and the Yankees' 10 1-2-game lead looms a bit as a pin-unscrubbed and as easy to cut down. The Yanks polished off the Browns, 9-0, yesterday with the aid of Joe DiMaggio's 27th home run, thereby eliminating the Brownies from all mathematical hope in the pennant parade—except that they had nothing to begin with at that.

Monte Lawson singled with the bases loaded in the ninth to win the Tigers' own game and give the Tigers a 6-5 decision over the Red Sox. A couple of ninth inning hits also decided the White Sox 4-3 conquest of the Senators. Mel Harder breezed along for a 10-5 win for the Indians over the Athletics.

HARRY SMYTHE TAKES LEAFS 9-2

Montreal Southpaw Has Indian Sign on Toronto

(By The Associated Press)

Harry Smythe, Montreal Royals' crack left hander, will never get any rest from the Toronto Maple Leafs. In August Argot all he has to do is bat the Leafs in "throw his glove out on the mound".

Smythe beat the Leafs last night with four hits 9-2 to further consolidate the Royals' hold on second place.

Royals tagged Earl Caldwell and his successor Joe Mulligan for 15 hits. Paul Dunlap got three-for-four and Smythe helped his own cause by knocking a double and two singles.

Syracuse Chiefs turned to hitting to nab a three game losing streak and pounded out a 10-5 victory over Baltimore Orioles.

Virgil Brown went the route for Syracuse as his mates belted Gordon Rhodes, Harry Matiasek and Johnny Wittig for 15 hits.

Truett Sewell coveed Rochester Red Wings into submission as Buffalo Bisons defeated the Wings 3-1. Sewell allowed five hits and blanked the best team in the league. Game between Newark and Jersey City was postponed because of rain.

MARVIN WARD A DARK HORSE

Sandy Somerville Out of U.S. Amateur Open in Third Round

(By Frank Gorrie)

Portland, Ore., Aug. 27.—(AP)—A young upstart from the Pacific Northwest who has never won a title of any kind—Marvin (Bud) Ward—caused a lot of commotion in the United States Amateur golf tournament today as he teed off with three big shots in the 36-hole semi-final Champion Johnny Fischer of Cincinnati, Johnny Goodman of Omaha and Ray Billows of Poughkeepsie, N.Y., were the other survivors.

The 34-year-old Olympia, Wash., tax collector, has gathered enough pars and birdies to eliminate four tough opponents.

Goodman, winner of the open in 1933 and pre-tournament favorite, opposed Ward in the lower-bracket battle today.

Fischer, only two matches away from succeeding defending champion he won last year, took on Billows, New York State Champion, in the other match.

The schedule of playing dates for the Senior Intercollegiate football group was announced recently with the opening date set for October 9th. The schedule reads:

Oct. 9th—McGill at Western Queens at Toronto.
Oct. 16th—Western at Queens
Toronto at McGill.
Oct. 23rd—Toronto at Western Queens at McGill.
Oct. 30th—Western at Toronto

Up in Toronto the St. Cyprian and Columbus juniors are all knotted up in their Junior T. A. B. A. finals, the final game being played at Viadact Park on Saturday. According to reports coming out of the Queen City, the ball fans of that city have been interested in the junior baseball this season. Rumours have it, the Junior Toronto title slated to travel south with professional fame by the way. The Belleville Kiwanis Eastern Ontario junior champs, are slated to meet the Toronto champs next week, but owing to the Belleville Fair the local management is trying to have the first game in Toronto next week with the return game in Belleville on Labor Day.

A guests of Manager Stewart Blain, the officers and members of the Belleville Algoma Junior Softball Club attended the Capitol Theatre last night for the showing of the motion picture, "Tarzan and the Moon", starring Kennie Baker, of Jack Benny's radio troupe. Mr. Blain is keenly interested in local sports of all kinds and can always be counted upon to entertain our athletes to the best of his ability through the fine offices of the Capitol Theatre."

Some of yesterday's rain clouds in New York carried a silver lining. At-any rate Promoter Mike Jacobs took no chances and called the scrap off at the last possible moment. It is a known fact—the advance sale of tickets was disappointing, so with a further four days in which to ballyhoo the fight, maybe Promoter Jacobs can wiggle out of the red. Farr had a nine-pound advantage over Louis when they weighed in yesterday. We know of one right fan who will be disappointed in the postponement, however. He is Harry Rosbough, local boxing enthusiast, who takes in all of the major bouts. Harry was in New York yesterday and in possession of a free ringside seat. "Tough Deal, Harry Rosbough."

It's amazing wrestling nights at the Arena that a number of those "chamatuers" are producing of some really classy shows, as can be seen by the increasing patronages each succeeding week. There are equally as interesting to follow on the rasslers will be on hand again tonight in a return match between Ernie Hughson and Peter Pernokis, the Greek flash. Hughson is the lad who pinned Jim Tincoski with his "unconscious hold" and Pernokis is the boy who has been trying to get a return match with the dusky maman. Both are clever grapplers and should put on a good show.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE CLOSE

Toronto, Aug. 27 (CP)—Nervous selling increased in the Toronto share market this afternoon and prices were trimmed to show losses of heavy fractions to points in the industrials and 5 to 25 cents among the active golds and cheaper base metals. Western oils boarded narrow declines. International clashes in Europe and the Orient were said to have prompted a note of caution, cutting down the stock buying demand.

The early market witnessed a strengthening of the senior base metals in spots, with an improved London metal market but base shares fell in with the general inclination in the afternoon and nickel backed up to 61¼, down 1¼, and Smeltings was off 1¼ at 41¼ close. Noranda failed to get back any of Thursday's fear-gained loss. Bigdon Bay weakened about a half point and losses of 10 to 20 cents were recorded for Ventures, Sherritt, Pend Oreille, Waite-Amulet and Falconbridge.

Gold issue selling in considerable volume at losses of 1-8 to 26 cents included Macassa, Pickle Crow, O'Brien, Bralorne and Toburn and others down about 10 cents were Little Long Lac, Central Patricia, MacLeod-Cockshutt, Moneta, San Antonio, Premier, Powell-Rouyn, Preston, Kerr-Addison and Mining Corporation. Dome weakened about a half point and Lake Shore ½.

A few golds held in the up side Teck Hughes, Wright Hargreaves, Gunnar, York, Ontario and Ketich were up.

WALL STREET

New York, Aug. 27.—(AP)—Selling in fitful tripped up the stock market today after early feeble rallying attempts failed to carry through.

Halts were better for a time, along with several Utilities and Specialties, but most stumbled in the latter part of the session.

Losses of fractions to 2 or more points were widely distributed near the final hour, but volume was considerably under that of yesterday. Transfers about 800,000 shares.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford by Financial Service.

MARKET COMMENT

Considerable nervousness was evident in the local market at the opening yesterday on reports (and later confirmed) that the British Ambassador in Shanghai had been shot and seriously wounded. This development is much unfortunate and is well be interesting to see what Right Honorable Malcolm does in the matter. It is assumed, of course, that the shooting was entirely an accident. It is felt that neither side would have anything to gain by antagonizing a Power of the strength of Great Britain.

It is most unfortunate that just when the market was beginning to show signs of coming to life, several factors combined to preclude a sustained recovery. The Chilean gas announcement adversely affected the mining list while heavy fighting in Shanghai had a sobering effect on world markets. In the meantime, the domestic business picture is being overlooked, although conditions have warrant a constructive market attitude.

On The Street

A local financier, who owned $10,000,000 of the Dominion of Canada Tax Free Bonds which fell due this year is having a difficult time replacing this money on the same satisfactory terms. It is well known figure on King Street, Toronto, held $2,000,000 of the same issue..... The New York Stock Exchange is not expected to close on September 4th this year. Some important houses feel that Montreal should not close on that date. The local Street is interested in the rumors in respect to several pending changes in the personnel of two or three Corporations.

Wright-Hargreaves Dividend Payments To Date Total $3.25 a Share

With payment of the quarterly dividend of 15 cents a share on October 1st, Wright Hargreaves will have distributed a total of $30,468,961 to shareholders since it inaugurated dividends. The present cents bonus each quarter has been rate of 10 cents regular and 5 maintained since October, 1934.

To date, the company has paid $3.85 per share in dividends. Follows the company's record of yearly dividend payments per share:

Cash and stock for 7 for 1 split up: 1922, 15c; 1923, 7½c; 1924, 7½c; 1925, 30c; 1926, 32½c; 1927, 25c; 1928, 30c; 1929, 7 for 1 split up 10c; 1928, 15c; 1929, nil; 1930, 5c; 1931, 15c; 1932, 20c; 1933, 10c; 1934, 30c; 1935, 60c; 1936, 60c; 1937, 60c.

Pickle Crow Values Strong At Depth

Pickle Crow's remarkably persistent and consistent main vein is standing up on the three new deep levels equally with the upper horizons.

Averages for the three new levels show little change for better or for worse as compared with the upper levels drifting. East drift faces on all three levels were continuing in good ore grade, according to last reports from the mine, but in the west drifts the vein had narrowed as might be expected from conditions prevailing on the upper levels. Shaft sinking was started two weeks ago on a program that is to take the shaft down to a depth of 2,000 ft. This will make available five more levels for development. Levels are to be established at intervals of 150 ft.

Production is proceeding at a rate of better than $210,000 monthly. Currently the mill is handling around 250 tons daily with heads grading in the neighborhood of $23.

Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Aug. 27.—Butter and cheese markets ruled firm yesterday, but eggs and potatoes were easy and steady. Chickens have been advanced 1 cent per lb. Receipts were 2,200 cases of eggs, 1,000 boxes of butter and 4,985 boxes of cheese, excluding truck arrivals.

At the Canadian Commodity Exchange trade was over 200 boxes of October fresh 92 score butter at 27c, with the close quoted at 26 7-8c to 27c. No 91 score was traded, but quoted 25 7-8c to 26 1-4c.

On the egg market graded shipments in free cases were 26-26 1-2c for A-large, 26-26 1-2c for A-medium, 23-23 1-2c for B and Prairie. Offerings at the Commodity Exchange were at 26c, 26c, 23 1-2c and 20c respectively.

Canning of Corn Starts Next Week

Canning factories of the district will start corn-canning operations next week, it was stated by producers in Prince Edward counties today.

"The crop points to being one of the best in years," one said, "and as far as we can ascertain, the bore question will not prove as knotty a problem as was at first feared."

Asked regarding the labor problem, the speaker stated that there would be no trouble in that direction. Factories would utilize local labor as far as possible and at present there appeared to be little or no shortage.

ANDREW MELLON

Ambassador to Great Britain, has passed from the American scene.

The shy, diffident, white haired financier, whose eleven years of service under three presidents was surpassed only by one of his predecessors as head of the Treasury Department, died last night in his 82nd year.

He died in the home of his daughter, Mrs. David K. E. Bruce after a month's illness from uremia and bronchial pneumonia.

Fabulously Wealthy.

Mellon, the fabulously wealthy but the extent of his personal fortune was in the realm of speculation when he died. The only official estimate made public was $300,000,000, given by Mellon's secretary during hearing of the banker's income tax appeal in 1931. Friends said, however, they believed the combined fortune of the financier and his two children would amount to approximately $500,000,000.

Denies Art Collection.

Only a few weeks before his last illness, he notified President Roosevelt and made final arrangements for his last great public benefaction —establishment of a national gallery of art in the national capital with his $30,000,000 art collection.

HON. T. A. KIDD IS NOMINATED

Former Speaker of Legislature Conservative Candidate in Kingston

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 27 (aCP)—The Dionne quintuplets have entered the Ontario political campaign. The five famed youngsters haven't taken sides themselves but they became a subject of campaign discussion when T. A. Kidd charged last night that Premier Hepburn "played politics" with the quints for five years.

The former speaker of the Ontario legislature was addressing a convention of Kingston Conservatives which nominating him to contest the constituency at the October election.

Mr. Kidd said it was only during the last session of the legislature when the opposition asked for an inquiry into the administration of quint affairs the guardianship was found where it should have been in the first place.

"Can you imagine the Premier of this province making political capital out of the Dionne quintuplets?" Mr. Kidd asked. "He turned them over to the Minister of Welfare, Mr. Croll.

WORKERS AGAIN OUT IN CORNWALL

Claim Some of their Members Discriminated Against in Mill

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 27 (CP)—No. 2 textile plant strike involving 1,700 workers of the Canadian Cottons, three mills here have been composed than another started; and once again the employees are out. Two ground floor spool mill walked out yesterday, calling with them those in the Dundas and Stormont mills on the same company.

Arthur Laverty, President of the Textile Workers' Union, said last night that the union had not authorized this latest strike.

"I am sorry the whole thing happened and deeply regret the action of the Stormont mill workers, but I am going to do what I can to straighten out the situation," said Laverty.

Meanwhile, A. G. Tolmie, General Manager of Canadian Cottons, said that the plant would close down for indefinite time since the reopening of the mills today. The mills would remain closed, he said, until the majority indicated their willingness to resume work.

"Meet me at the fountain" at Belleville Fair, is still the slogan of the young folks.

Article 1

Hello everybody! So many have been asking for months as to when I intend to go away again, and write more interesting articles for their entertainment and instruction that I have decided to take a little time from big business, and write for these myriads of kind people. In modesty I write now a few of their greetings with reference to my humble efforts:

KIND WORDS

1. You write just what I want and the way I like it.

2. You say so much and so clearly in a sentence or two; it is marvelous.

3. I am keeping your writings for their model English.

4. I follow you right along wherever you go just as easily as if I were actually there; your word pictures are superlative art in the highest and finest sense of the word.

5. You are the keenest observer I ever knew; I would go over the same ground and not see or understand half that meets your keen eye and understanding.

6. Your articles are much too short and too few. I am truly sorry when you return home.

7. Of all the places you have visited, where would you prefer to reside? My answer is Southern California, but when the question includes the words "prefer to reside and make a living", I reply "Ontario by all means".

8. I enjoy your articles because they give useful knowledge.

9. Those of us who cannot leave home through sickness, age or other causes, yearn to know what other parts of the world are like and what other people think and do.

10. Very many of your readers have been greatly encouraged and inspired.

SERVICE

These are only a few of the kind words from old and young, who recognize me by my picture, and introduce themselves everywhere every day. Hence it is easy to understand why I recently offered my services to The Ontario Intelligencer for a couple of weeks in order to write up the various features of the Toronto Exhibition which continues from August 21 to September 11. Previous considerations involving considerable sacrifice for local privileges to the Toronto Exhibition free of charge. The interest and appreciation of the readers of The Ontario Intelligencer in this particular case outweighed all other considerations. Surely the duty of a newspaper advertising writer will not forget to express their gratitude to the publishers of The Ontario Intelligencer, a daily newspaper whose ideals are far above those of any other known, intimately to the writer?

WARNING

It is necessary to warn readers that this series of articles must necessarily appear in rapid succession, in fact almost every day, in order to give the maximum of pleasure and benefit.

TORONTO EXHIBITION 1938

As a lad the writer attended the Toronto Exhibition for the first time forty-five years ago during its whole period in the capacity of assistant in charge of one of the exhibits in the main building, the only large building on the grounds at that time. The first great thrill of my life was when on the grounds at that time. The first great thrill of my life was when at the age of five I caught a ride on a few horses' backs with a band just on this suggestion at Toronto in 1858, and the second. A lad from a village of five hundred inhabitants came in contact with the great outside world for the first time. Deep impressions were made on that plastic nature which moulded his life forever. During many successive years to the present, he has attended that great gathering annual World's Fair, and the results have been a wide mental knowledge of man, his environment and activities. A few years ago he had an exhibit there for the Five Hundred publications of The James Tribe.

EDUCATIONAL FEATURES

The writer has been over nearly half the surface land and water, of all the globe, has visited most of the most important points of interest, but all of them combined cannot compare with the Educational Features of the Toronto Exhibitions, with its people and displays from all over the world. For over half a century the writer has been so deeply impressed as to be enabled that he now gives the opportunity to write and instruct with more than ordinary enthusiasm. Much of what is written will appeal to children with equal zest. I urgently suggest that adults read to them or tell them the substance of what I write about some of the exhibition features, and I am sure that they will be rewarded by a love and a sparkling eye that gold can never gain.

GROWTH

Anything that is not dead or dying continues to grow and become bigger and better. The Toronto Exhibition began many years ago with a few buildings and small grounds similar to our present Belleville Fair. Gradually more and better buildings were erected, and from time to time the grounds were enlarged until now it surpasses any World Fair ever known. Many scores of buildings are really palaces for size and grandeur. Numerous features are added every year so that side by side are found the old and the new. "I shall have much to say about a new feature of international interest added this year. It is an exhibit by hundreds of stamp collectors including the writer.

SITUATION

The growth of the Toronto Annual World Fair has been due partly to good management and keen foresight on the part of the officers in charge, but also just as much to situation. Toronto is central for North America, and the exhibition grounds are ideally situated on a body of water. These various factors have brought about economic and educational results unprecedented in the history of the world. Surely such an institution is worthy of a few intensive articles for the benefit of the thousands who cannot attend? The business houses, hotels and homes of Toronto reap an annual revenue of not less than one million dollars from this famous Fair. The teachers of Ontario have Toronto several hundred thousand dollars every Easter, and similarly with many other conventions every year. Toronto has become one of the world's most favored cities.

ETERNAL CHANGE

Change is an instinct of every human being. We tire of the same food, the same rooms and furniture, the same streets, stores and people, and unhappy husbands and wives have more than their share of this instinct, and divorce may ensue. If we lead a busy, nervous life we go to summer cottage or tent, but if our life has been dull we go to some place of excitement like the Toronto Exhibition. On my journey to Toronto I met a man from Eastern Ontario who illustrated this point perfectly. We sat together in the same seat, and soon became quite confidential with each other. A school teacher of forty years' experience knows how to get what he wants to know from any one.

"Are you a Doctor?" was his first question after we were comfortably settled and the train was under way.

"Not so mighty, sir, just a retired high school Principal. What is your business may I ask?"

"I have a country post office and general store, and I'm awfully fed up with it all."

Here was my chance to study human problems, because everybody delights to dilate on their sufferings, losses, and operations, and many people affirm that life is painful and difficult. I have been deeply keen on this phase of life for several years, and now you may listen-in on my methods of discovery.

"I'm surprised and also interested. In the city we have it so strenuous that we become nervous wrecks, strenuous business all day, and noisy, uncontrolled children racing around the residential streets long after dark."

"It's so dead and dull with me that I would welcome anything for commotion. My poor wife long ago succumbed to silence and solitude from which until ten. For many years I have prepared my own breakfast, and have eaten it alone. Her morning company and comfort would have been made my life as south more blessed."

"Was your wife always so indifferent?"

"Oh, very splendid while our children were growing up, but when they married and left home, she lost all interest in life. She grumbles when she washes and irons a shirt for me."

"Perhaps your wife suffers from ill-health?" I suggested, anxious to help her cause.

"Not at all, the picture of health, and never consults a physician. More than that she expects to outlive me, and is always harping on my will. She insists that I leave everything unconditionally to her, and this I cannot in fairness do. Why the law permits such conditions is more than I can understand!"

"Your change at Toronto Exhibition will give you new hope and joy. Your condition is sad but not beyond repair. Wives and husbands have always been troublesome but not so impossible as we often imagine. Abraham rebuked his wife severely, Solomon gave his score of wives the benefit of his wisdom, and Henry VIII of England got rid of only twelve of many loads. I am studying this problem of connubial delinquency and hope to have something soon that will be original and heaven-born on the incompatible subject.

"Please take my name and address, and send me a copy of your publication the moment it is ready. Perhaps she will get a new lease of life and again become a good wife."

Here are a few lines I memorized at the saddest period of my own life; they may help you, too:

"'As evening's pale and solitary star
But brightens while the darkness gathers 'round,
So Faith conserved amid surrounding storms
Is fairest seen in darkness most profound."

This synopsis of a sermon I once heard made me my companion's lips quiver, and he pressed my hand nervously.

Like a flash of joy from Heaven, at this solemn moment, a very handsome young lady boarded the train, and came to rest two seats in front of us. Their happiness was so contagious that everyone in the car seemed to feel a touch of joy and happiness. As my companion too smiled through his tears, he whispered:

"When I was a boy at school I used to repeat the following in my sweetheart's ear that at the right moment I might kiss her:

"'She is a noun though generally used as a pronoun. It is more common than proper. It is not very singular and is generally used in the plural number, and it agrees with me."

We laughed so heartily now that people looked at us in amusement.

"I have so much leisure time that I do not know what to do with that I read a great deal, and memorize some that especially appeal to me. I continued my travelling companion after a brief pause. "Here are a few lines I found recently:

"'Add virtue to beauty, subtract envy from friendship, multiply amiable accomplishments by sweetness of temper, divide time by sociability and refine second to its lowest denomination.'

I had travelled many miles in many climes, but never had met a man of inaction like unto this one. Here were two men of about the same age, who stepped in daily action, the other with scarcely anything to do, and both were bound for that whirlpool of action, the Toronto Exhibition. Would the reaction be the same in each case, or in any one case? Further discussion will be given to these questions as opportunity affords.

TORONTO

When I first saw Toronto 50 years ago it had horse-drawn street cars and no paved streets. Its population to-day is far over half a million; then it was less than a quarter of that. The several years that I spent at the University of Toronto in Arts and Law ending forty-two years ago the years were the happiest and most important of my life. The influences of University studies, the companionship of fellow students, the churches and the variety of wholesome entertainment, gave my life a course and direction which has improved, I hope, though never radically altered. Now when I write in and about Toronto, I feel the spell of those far distant happy, formative days. Many of these early memories will linger forever when I am in Toronto and it is possible that another such a spell I may think and write different than at other times. Most of the people like Timothy Eaton, W. J. Gage, Sir Daniel Wilmot, and others who deeply influenced my life have long ago passed on, but their influence and inspiration still bears fruit, and it is my great ambition now in years as much of it as possible on to others, who in turn will do the same thing.

This article is introductory but it will soon be found to be necessary in order to give the proper background and understanding to what is soon to follow.

Best wishes to all.

To Fellow-Workers
you are Courteous—
Try Courtesy
With Your Fellow-Motorists

IN THE factory, on the farm, in offices, stores, banks, garages and service stations we are all courteous and considerate to those with whom we work, yet courtesy is the greatest contact.

Such courtesy makes our daily contacts a pleasure.

But do we all "Try Courtesy" towards those same people and towards others when we all become fellow-motorists?

Do we head-signal our intention to slow down, turn or stop? Do we wave thanks for our intention to overtake by gently nodding on our horn? Do we drive at approximately the speed of the traffic we are in and refrain from "zooming in and out"?

Do we slow down around our horns and otherwise drive with the most extreme caution where there are children? Do we dip or dim our bright headlights when meeting a fellow-motorist at night? Do we give the other fellow "the brake" in tight places, on corners, in heavy traffic and in "pockets"?

Follow these suggestions, and the many others which will occur to the driver who thinks in terms of courtesy, and you will travel more safely and more enjoyably—"Try Courtesy" every inch of the way.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE BELLE

"Saratoga"

Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in Thrilling Virile Drama of Race Track, Type in Story and Acting

Thrills, laughs, drama and romance mingle in a literal cross section of American racing life in "Saratoga," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's drama of the love and couch of Jean Harlow and Clark Gable to the Belle Theatre tomorrow (Saturday) for a four days' engagement, matinee daily at 2.30 p.m. each day, evening at 7.15 and 9.15 p.m.

Penned by the authors of "San Francisco," Anita Loos and Robert Hopkin, it has standing of the best thrills, such as the great race that climaxes the grand couch of the same virile quality. Miss Harlow and Gable make flashy, and finally love in a romance now whimsical comedy, now tense drama, as each conveyed a direction is as skilful as it was in "Libeled Lady", and Lionel Barrymore contributes one of his outstanding characteristics as the old race horse breeder.

Jean Harlow

"Saratoga" tells the story of the daughter of a rich horse owner and a bookmaker's fearless friend, whom she hates and fights, then loves. Their romance, their battle, their bets, plot and counterplot behind the scenes in the paddock and infield, the sensational racing climax, worked out on a new dramatic level, keep the picture packed with action. Against this action the romance story is developed.

Una Merkel and Frank Morgan appear as a new comedy team. Walter Pidgeon plays a fine part, and more laughs as well as song are contributed by Cliff Edwards and his ukulele.

Location sequences filmed at Santa Anita provide a great stock farm are among spectacular details of the story. It is a picture that you will never forget. It is action-packed drama, with a smile, a laugh, a thrill, a tear or joy.

The latest Belle News flashes will be of interest to neighborhood folk. They are moving this week to Mr. Paul Vernon's house.

Master Douglas Longwell returned to his home in Demorestville on Saturday after spending the past four weeks with his grandmother, Mrs. Mildred Benson.

Mrs. Robert Hinch and Robert, Jr., and Mr. Joe Yott and Caroline Yott were Wednesday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Wallers.

Mrs. John Thompson of Picton and Mrs. James Mathie spent Thursday with the former's daughter, Mrs. Mildred Benson.

Master Lewis Smith is leaving his home in Schoharie on Friday evening after spending the past four weeks with Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Cleave.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Hit the Saddle"

Wild West Hi-Man, Two-Gun Tamer with Hoss Collegian

Packed with thrills, feverish in pace, highlighted by running gunfights, wild horse stampedes and thrilling attempts at wholesale horse stealing, "Hit the Saddle," latest in the series of Republic "Three Mesquiteers" films, which comes to the Capitol on Saturday only is a thrill-filled Wild West story.

As usual in this series, Bob Livingston plays handsome Stony Brooke, Ray "Crash" Corrigan is the stalwart Tuscon Smith and Max Terhune again figures as Lullaby Joslin, an easy riding cowboy. This time, the boys ride herd on a bunch of illicit wild horse thieves and exterminate them after several breathtaking battles.

Of course, there are some tight spots for our heroes, as when Stony is captured by the outlaws and taken to their mountain hideout. There also is a villain let loose by their killer horse to trample him to death but Stony's Pinto pals loose the killer over the villain. Tuscon's stallion until Tuscon and Lullaby ride up and beat back the rene-gades.

There's a beautiful cowgirl in the story, charmingly played by Julie Caaine. She adds the feminine zest that makes the plot picture doubly attractive. All in all "Hit the Saddle" may be cited as one of the best of the thrilling and exciting at the "Three Mesquiteers" series. See it by all means!

Assisting the Three Mesquiteers in their latest film "Hit the Saddle" are such excellent players as Ed Cassidy, J. P. McGowan, Yakima Canutt and Jack Kirk.

Added Shorts

In addition to this swell western thriller, we present a grand array of short features, a Krazy Kat Kartoon, "Catnips of 1940," a Tim and Irene comedy, "The Mackey Family," the latest Pete Smith novelty and a Charles Murray comedy, "His Old Flame," complete this splendid bill.

Today Only

Shown for the last times today, the last word in musical comedies, "Turn Off the Moon," with an all star cast, and a circus picture that will thrill everyone, "The Maxims." Last complete show at 8.30.

President Jas. Barber Predicts Fair's Success

Says Community Gatherings Prove That Times Are Better and 1937 Fair at Belleville Will be Additional Barometer Indicating Growth of Prosperity.

"Community gatherings which have occurred during the past few days and which are usually a barometer of the times have proved conclusively that times are better," people are taking an interest in affairs which affect directly and indirectly the community in which they live, and for this reason I predict one of the largest fairs in the history of the Association to view the many fine attractions which the directors have provided for them this year," James Barber, President of the Board of Directors of the Belleville Agricultural Society stated this morning.

"Realizing this," President Barber continued, "the directors have co-operated by providing exhibits of livestock, agricultural products, entertainment, music and the thousand and one attractions that go to make a successful fair, commensurate with the uptrend of the times. Everyone is prosperous, especially in communities of the type in which we live, have by their industry, thrift and resourcefulness enjoyed during the past year, shown that at least a percentage of the long-looked-for prosperity has arrived here.

"The directors have worked hard to make this year's Fair one of the most notable in years. Even the livestock branch their industries have been augmented by a large entry list in a decade. The same applies to entry lists of other classes of agriculture. If they have not forgotten the entertainment angle. People want to be and must be amused and we have not, I think, one of the best amusement programs obtainable. The midway in itself is one of outstanding caliber. There will be two 7-piece bands on the grounds each day, the first time in Canada. The rest of the midway is of high repute and will, we feel sure, meet with the hearty approval of the people of the district."

To Please Everyone

"We have tried to cater to the tastes of every individual. For the music lovers there will be bands galore. Agriculture naturally will predominate, and we feel sure that the most rabid critic will go home well satisfied with the 1937 edition of the Belleville Fair."

"Insofar as the directors are concerned," Mr. Barber stated, "they have collaborated in a wonderful way. All have worked hard, and the duties of each have been seen in the fine exhibition which will be offered to the public city and surrounding districts next week. We hope that the public will in turn co-operate with us and show by their patronage that it appreciates the efforts of the men responsible for bringing to them the best Agricultural Exhibition seen in Belleville in many a year.

"We therefore, extend a cordial invitation to everyone to join with us in this gala affair. After all it is the people's Fair and it is only by their patronage that we can continue to provide for them year after year one of the finest exhibits shown in Eastern Ontario."

Purebred Stock at Fair Most Numerous in History

Two Large Tents Are Necessary for Accommodation

FROM WIDE RANGE

The largest entry list of purebred stock in the history of the Belleville Fair has been registered at Secretary H. H. Ketcheson's office, it was revealed today. The entry list for purebred beef cattle, dairy type of cattle, swine and sheep have increased to such an extent that the pens at the Fair Grounds will be taxed to overflowing. In order to have the surplus number of entries the Fair Board today placed tents with a large seating capacity for the rental of two mammoth tents in which cattle will be on exhibition during the fair.

"Although the entries for other sections, such as poultry, dairy products and fruits do not close until Saturday night, we can assure the patrons of a much larger showing of exhibits as the increase in pure bred stock for this year is indicative of the interest that all other lines will also see additional exhibits to those of last year," predicted Secretary Ketcheson today.

To date pure bred stock entries have been received from 'at-fair points in the Province of Prince Edward County and as far west as London and Woodstock. The Belleville Fair, renowned for its showing of stock, fruits, vegetables, dairy products and poultry, is expected to be a class "B" fair this year in the same category as the Peterborough Exhibition, London Fair and Hamilton. Renowned for its merit as showings at farm exhibits, the Belleville Fair of 1937 promises to be the biggest and best in its history.

Little Pigs and Big Pigs Are Coming to District Fair

Breed Stressed in These Days of Fashion in Everything

HOG-RAISING AREA

"This little pig went to market" says an old Mother Goose rhyme. But the modern version of this famous children's poem is quite different. That the old Lady Goose lived in this day and age and included in her verse the question: "I would have written "These little pigs went to the Fair".

For while other breeders of the county and surrounding districts naturally rate the majority of their hogs for marketing purposes, they have not been forgetful of the value of their stock as a show-piece.

Farmers in general while specializing in the raising and feeding of pure bred horses and cattle have not neglected the pigs. Back as long ago, a Breeders' Association was formed, comprising the counties of Eastern Ontario whose initial Field Day held in Belleville Agricultural Grounds proved to be a pronounced success. Breeders from all parts of the province and the blood-strains even in the lowly pig are are rapidly drawing away from the old idea of the pig as a pitiful, skelter sort of fashion. Sires of international repute have been the champions of many parts of the province, and have introduced. And the result has been that the calibre swine of this district has been raised to a level that compares favorably with any in the country.

While the improvement of the condition of this blooded stock has been noticed in the increase of marketing, the most important feature is that so great has been the improvement in the general quality that farmers and breeders with a justifiable sense of pride in their stock have turned to the autumn fairs to exhibit their stock. And with Belleville one of the centres of the hog-raising industry, it is natural to assume that the swine display there will be one of the finest in Eastern Ontario. Yorkshires, Berkshires, Tamworth, and the aristocracy of other prominent breeds will be on display at the Agricultural Grounds next week in an exhibit of stock which will do

By Maryse Rutledge

"You knew? It was the same girl who—you met me, Mr. Kayo?" asked that night evening as Mrs. Anthony Kaye. Why didn't you say something then? Why didn't you tell me, Mr. Kaye? Why didn't you challenge my opinion? Why did you let me think it could have happened?"

"My dear lady!" La Paule sounded shocked.

"And suppose I refuse to pose for that head?" Coker throbbed back to her chest.

The sickly light eyes seemed to burn pale blue flames. "It is fatal it must be," he said. "I speak as an artist, madame."

Strange how completely unafraid now she felt. "So they were right. You're vile. You do blackmail women," she said slowly. "You say you can paint in that head whether I pose or not. And you will. Are you blackmail to make them pay? Or do you expect me to buy?" Her head soon blazed out at him. "I know this picture has a price you could sell—"

Amusement widened in Paule asked her hand. "It is you who do not know or understand," he cried. "Paris d'homme—my word of honor, I would not have you. It is the nature of this picture, to sell—and to love. Yes, madame. That I may answer what you can believe me. See—I will confess to you. I have done things I am not proud of." He threw out his hands. "But you do not know the struggle for me. Heart is in—sick from everything, from the war, from the loss of my brothers killed in battle, the loss of my family, our properties, our fortunes—all gone."

He caught the softened blue of her eyes as she drew away her hand. "Listen to me, madame." It went on as in appeal. "Try to understand. I come here. You come. I try some through troubles, and yet I meet women like these and these men—" He waved at the portraits in their innocence. "They want money, romance, admiration—first, last, and—everything. I am clever—yes! An artist. A Frenchman, so they come for what I give. Should they not pay? But you—you are different. I do not want to pay. I do not question the cost I put upon my beautiful woman you are now. I only say I must finish this picture."

Jane turned away, uncertainly. Other women had paid one way or another. She should loathe him, and yet— The glimpse he had given her stirred her to a new, strange, tormented depths she knew nothing of and could not judge. Whatever harm he did, she was sure of that now.

"I think I understand better," she said gently. "But I think there are some things I could never forgive you for. I'm going away soon to Paris. Perhaps some day, if we meet again, I shall know."

La Paule, still white and strained, bowed as before a very old lady. "You are kind," he said in a low voice. "I shall wait for that day—perhaps in Paris. Who knows?"

"And now I must go." Jane's smile was faint and lovely.

"I beg of you—one more cocktail. You will not refuse." La Paule was once more the charming host, hand raised. "You will pardon me if I leave you a moment to make fresh ones?" Lifting the shaker he was out of the studio before Jane could object.

A vague hardness kept her from. He left her, perhaps deliberately, alone with the picture of a painted Jane Carey. The girl who smiled back at her seemed to have only a vacuity of youth, a pathetic stumbling with fate. The quick rip of a palette knife, and the picture was gone. Jane, on the adventure, would forever be annihilated. Jane stared a second at the half-finished canvas that seemed shrouded and unfathomable. Then she turned her head.

Lorna flashed about to the large open portfolio spread open on the table, her green eyes narrowing on the other pencilled studies that Jane had so sturdy seen. Every one of them evidence of her relations with Henri la Paule, for obviously she wasn't a professional model. Violetly, she shoved the portfolio. It thudded to the floor, scattering water colors, drawings, the exquisite landscapes that Jane had earlier admired.

"What are you doing here?" she demanded. "How dare you? Sneaking through Henri's things! Give that to me," and she leaped again with a charging thrust of her red head.

But Jane, far taller, stood over Lorna in frozen disgust. "I will not. And you pretend to love Tony?" she said in a low voice. "Oh, it's too unspeakably vile and treacherous of you. What I think I'm going Tony up to you—!"

"What happens here?" La Paule, with a plate of canapes and a frosty filled shaker, came swiftly through the end door. In his agitation after his talk with Jane, he had closed the nearby door, and heard nothing. His glance now took in the two women, the portfolio and sketches sprawling on the floor. With a running gesture he set down plate and shaker, and reached Lorna. "You will explain this!" His narrow blood face seemed to cut through the air—down at her.

"I've been spying on us," Lorna snapped. "Make her give that back, Henri. Can't you see she can ruin me?" Her voice rose to hysteria as she clutched at his arm.

La Paule shook her off, his pale blue eyes cold. "Quelle histoire! You lose your head, your mind, Lorna," and he stepped over to Jane—"I am sorry," he said gently. "You do not pertains' understand what is an artist. A woman poses. It means nothing."

"As if she'd believe that where I'm concerned," Lorna broke in passionately. "She'll tell Tony. That's what she'll do."

"Pales-vous." It was like the order of a whip striking her on, and she jerked back as if he had struck her.

"Madame, I beg of you to forgive this so unfortunate—" he went on to Jane.

She turned slowly, and slowly handed him the water color. The last June sun, beating through silk curtains, edged the gold of curls with large hat, but something of youth had gone from her.

"Madame, I beg of you—this portfolio." She couldn't go on. The great room studded with portraits of beautiful women, the silk-covered canvas of herself as the Jane Carey of long ago, seemed tainted with ugliness.

TARZAN THE MAGNIFICENT

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

Tarzan and Lord were thrust into a dismal cell. The guard shrieked and was gone. Tarzan admitted to himself that they stood now in the shadow of doom, for he knew the wily Woore would surround them with all manner of devilish devices to block their escape.

Meanwhile, Stanley Wood, after he had eluded his friend, Tarzan, trudged back toward the evil land of the Kaf. He was afraid, yet he was drawn to the mountain trail by that impelling urge which, he believed, had its source in the mind of Marka.

He sat down to rest. With heavy heart he gazed back at the low country from which he had come. Then suddenly he found himself surrounded by Kaf women warriors. "Al-ya!" they cried. "The slave of the Queen sought to escape! To the castle with him."

Into the walled city they led him, helpless and hopeless. From a window Queen Corkala beheld the awful procession. A gasp of horror parted her lips, and she began to sob. "They have caught him. Now Marka, my father, will kill him—kill the man I love."

IMPROVEMENT OF ENVOY EASES SITUATION

Text of Protest Made To Tokyo Government May be Published Today

Suggestion is Made That Even Firmer Note May Be Sent

PAPERS CRITICAL

Indemnity Maye be Asked on Behalf of Ambassador

London, Aug. 28 (CP Cable) More favorable reports from Shanghai on the condition of Sir Hughe Knatchbull-Hugessen today eased considerably the strain felt here in the situation arising from the shooting of the British envoy by Japanese aviators.

A foreign office statement outlining the action taken by the government was anticipated awaited. There seemed to be no doubt that J. L. Dodds, counsellor of the British Embassy in Tokyo, had been instructed by Foreign Secretary Eden to present to the British protest, but when or to whom was unknown.

Fraser Wale Suggested

The diplomatic correspondent of The Daily Telegraph said a strongly worded note presumably would be more concrete than vague reports was likely to be sent over the week-end.

"A bad impression has been created," The Telegraph added, "by the fact that representatives of the Japanese government in Shanghai, Tokyo and London did not immediately make full responsibility for the outrage, and indignation is felt in the semi-official attempts made at successive stages to suggest first

War Rumblings 'Round the World

Shanghai, Aug. 28 (AP)—Heavy Japanese bombardment of the Woosung area, immediately north of Shanghai, today crippled facilities of two wide communication Commercial Pacific Cables and Eastern and Northern.

Shanghai, Aug. 28 (CP-Reuter)—Confidence in the recovery of Sir Hughe Knatchell-Hugessen necessarily increased with the report that he said the envoy had passed a good night and had the pains he has so far made.

Tokyo, Aug. 28 (CP-Havas)—Domei (Japanese) News Agency reported from Shanghai today the Chinese government has concluded a non-aggression treaty with the Soviet Union. The treaty was said to stipulate that each would refrain from giving any assistance to a third power committing aggression against the other, thus outlawing parting parties. According to Domei the treaty was concluded only a few days ago.

Nanaimo, B.C., Aug. 28 (CP)—Dr. Alfred E. Hoolmarch, Nanaimo born and educated at international law at Harvard University, told a service club here yesterday Japan had invaded China because it was "the only logical move she could make to cure the ills of her own nation which is climbing at the rate of 1,000,000 a year."

Regulski, B.C., Aug. 28 (CP)—Apparently in an effort to protect her interests shipping at present and her sails into Oriental waters, workmen today painted replicas of the Union Jack on the while "top-side" of the Canadian Pacific Steamships' Empress of Japan.

Bayonne, France-Spanish Frontier, Aug. 28 (AP)—Gen. Franco's Spanish Insurgent air force bombed the Spanish Government base at Gijon in the centre of the Biscayan coast, killing and wounding many civilians, government representative announced today. The bombardment followed government forces' refusal to heed the communiy insurgent ultimatum of "surrender or take the consequences".

Nanking, Aug. 28 (AP)—Military observers said today China's most complete land, air and coastal defence organization, begun immediately after the Japanese attack on the Marco Polo Bridge, China's capital province. A general advance through the province containing Shanghai, Nanking and other great population centres was expected.

Tientsin, Aug. 28 (CP-Havas)—Hostilities broke out in Tientsin today. China has encouraged Prince Teh Wang, Mongolian leader, to revive the ancient title of Jenghis Khan, pulitan greatness under Japanese influence, it was reported here today. Japanese sources quoted the Prince as saying he would co-operating with the Kwantung (Japanese mainland) army in Chahar Province, as saying that the time has come for the Mongols to cast off the yoke of enslavement and reconstruct Asia under Japanese direction."

Why the Weather?

By Major A. E. Thiessen, Science Master, Macdonald Institute

Ozone! This very peculiar gas was first observed in 1785 by Van Marum when he electrified oxygen. Ozone has a pungent odor, and under great pressure its color is blue. It is much more active chemically than oxygen. It is produced in a variety of ways, and commercially by passing a silent electric discharge through air. It has many uses as a sterilizer in purifying water, indoor air, bandages in hospitals, and in bleaching oils and fabrics. It is also used in curing processes as it is produced by lightning and also by ultra-violet light. The last fact leads to the belief that it is present in the upper atmosphere. But it is unstable and changes readily into the usual form of oxygen.

THE WEATHER

Toronto, Aug. 28 (CP)—Pressure is high over the greater part of Canada today, with a weak trough area extending southward from Hudson Bay across the Rainy River district to the Middle Western States. A deep disturbance is developing in the Yukon. Showers and thunderstorms have occurred in some parts of the Maritimes, that Quebec and Northwestern Ontario though elsewhere in Eastern Canada the weather has been fair. It has become cooler over practically Saskatchewan with a few scattered showers in southern districts.

Lake Superior—Moderate to fresh east and southeast winds; partly cloudy, followed by local thundershowers tonight. Sunday, fresh winds, shifting to south; partly cloudy with scattered showers or thunderstorms and becoming somewhat cooler.

Manitoba—North and northeast winds; partly cloudy and cooler; a few scattered showers in south portion. Sunday, fair and comparatively cool.

Saskatchewan — Partly cloudy and cool; comparatively today and Sunday.

Alberta—Partly cloudy today and Sunday; not much change in temperature.

TWO MORE CITIES DELAY OPENING OF ALL SCHOOLS

46 Year Old Man is Stricken With Paralysis at London

SITUATION IN PROVINCE

Home-Made Wooden 'Lung' Used Successfully at Toronto

Two more western Ontario cities—St. Thomas and Woodstock—have decided to postpone school opening until after Labor Day as a result of the infantile paralysis epidemic which since early June has attacked close to 400 persons in Ontario.

St. Thomas will remain closed until Sept. 13 with provision a further hold be given should conditions not have by that time placed a ban on public bathing pools and, like London, asked theatre managers to bar children from shows. Neighboring Southwold has also followed suit in opening day instead of the regulation Sept. 7.

Woodstock postponed opening until Sept. 7, although Dr. F. S. Rattan, Medical Health Officer here, expressed opinion there was nothing to be gained by the action. He believed the children could be better under supervision than "running around." Woodstock has three definite and two suspected cases, while St. Thomas has four under observation.

Middle Aged Man Afflicted.

The situation at London continued to improve with only one case, a 46-year-old man. He was the oldest person afflicted of the 45 under treatment. Voluntary ban was being placed on Sunday school meetings.

Dr. G. S. Ingish, Simcoe's M.O.H., said there was no danger from persons who had visited Simcoe's second case.

Nine of the fifteen Ontario deaths have omitted in Toronto where twenty new cases yesterday brought the total since the beginning of June to 200. The Board of Health voted down a proposal to bar children from the Canadian National Exhibition which started this week.

The condition of a 22-year-old man placed in the conirapsion at Hamilton General Hospital was reported as slightly improved but he was not yet out of danger. Hamilton had five new cases reported.

Turpolo ordered a second machine and it will be in use as soon as it arrives tomorrow. Dr. Gordon F. Jackson, M.O.H., said. In the meantime a home-made "lung" at Toronto Hospital proved the usefulness of a machine made from vacuum cleaner and five more were being built.

The wooden lung was controlled with aavina the life of a four-year-old boy in the children's hospital. Physicians said he might have died in the emergency when no regular machine was available. In the iron condition, the lad was placed inside and an hour later showed marked improvement.

Kitchener, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—Mrs. Ethel Bowman, 28, died today of infantile paralysis in Wellesley Township and a second was feared.

The victim was a 17-year-old girl and while paralysis has nit definitely set in, the physician in charge has been a perceptible weakening of the muscles indicating the disease affecting both legs. The girl fell ill last Sunday and had scrum administered.

Paris Pact of 9 Years Ago Still Agent of Peace—Kellogg

Rallying Point for World Opinion Despite Conflicts

PACT A 'SIGNPOST'

New York, Aug. 28 (AP)—Despite conflict raging in China and Spain, Frank B. Kellogg, former United States Secretary of State, last night expressed optimism for the Paris Peace Pact, which he helped to father and which was signed nine years ago yesterday.

In a statement broadcast by Prof. James T. Shotwell, Canadian-born president of the United States League of Nations Association and director of the Division of Economic and History of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, Kellogg said:

"In spite of the spirit of violence which today more some of the nations who were signatories of that pact, I confidently believe that the formal renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy has practically all of the nations of the world and prove to have been an epoch-making event.

"Thus that declaration is not self-executing. Its effectiveness must depend upon a nation-wide, indeed a world-wide public opinion which will demand that the treaty be observed. But the very existence of the Pact as an open acknowledgement by governments of the principle it embodies, these alone afford a rallying point and a strong foundation for that world opinion."

Dr. Shotwell, a native of Strathroy, Ont., described the pact as not in any sense "a juridical thinking" but a signpost "marking out the era of the future from that of the past." Shotwell, it is understood, is the author of the phrase.

Peace Overtures Rumored Of Hitler and Vatican

Papal Nuncio Confers With German State Secretary at Berlin—Diplomatic Re lations Broken off Since June 1

Berlin, Aug. 28 (AP)—Rumors of peace negotiations between Chancellor Hitler and the Vatican found partial confirmation today in the authoritative information the Papal Nuncio, Mgr. Cesare Orsenigo, conferred at the foreign office with State Secretary Hans von Mackensen.

The visit assumed an aura of importance in official quarters. It was the first of its kind since diplomatic relations between the Vatican and Nazi Germany reached a so-called "frozen" state June 1 because of German reaction to a speech by George Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago.

"The Chicago Prelate, in a speech which is Vatican declined to publish," stated Hitler "was Austrian paperhanger and a poor one at that."

Precautionary Measures Urged In Infantile Paralysis Epidemic

Toronto, Aug. 28 (CP)—A rapidly rising temperature, weakened aches, vomiting and soreness in the back, arms and legs are among the symptoms of Poliomyelitis, the Ontario Department of Health said in a statement published today advising citizens of precautionary measures in connection with an epidemic of infantile paralysis which has stricken nearly 400 persons throughout the province and caused 19 deaths.

Isolation of the patient for at least three weeks is recommended by the department. Parents were advised to "keep your child in your own yard," and to avoid crowds. Of nasal sprays, the statement said, the best method in use is still entirely in the experimental stage. It is not one which can be recommended for general use."

4 MAJOR ISSUES BEFORE ELECTORS STATES PREMIER

Hepburn Says No Burden Added to Primary Producers

Petrolia, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—List of the four issues considered by Premier Mitchell Hepburn as the big major ones in the Ontario general election campaign, were placed before electors today. The are: The government's financial record; Hydro-Electric Power system administration; the drive for Succession Duties and the province's record in banning "Foreign Agitators in the province."

The Premier defined the issues here yesterday at a convention of East Lambton Liberals which renominated Milton D. McVicar, present member for the Ontario House and heard William Guthrie, M.L.A. for Lambton West, as the only possibility of a complete Liberal sweep.

Mr. Hepburn defended the administration of the Liquor Control Act and said there was no more licensed for the sale of beer today than there were five years ago when Ontario Temperance Act came into force. He answered Conservative charging loose administration to hide the "all-time" record of the previous government.

Conservative Leader Claims Impending Power Shortage

Kemptville, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—Leonard Rowe will be candidate in Ontario under a Conservative Government and in a "more Dominion" manner, it has been established in the past three years, Hon. Earl Rowe, Conservative leader, said in an election campaign speech here.

This was Mr. Rowe's answer to Premier Mitchell Hepburn's claim that nationalism will be an issue and was an issue in the coming election. The Conservative leader charged Mr. Hepburn with planting the seed of "Fascism" as he spoke at the Lions' Club luncheon of Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, former Ontario Conservative Premier.

Hepburn Attacked

Premier Hepburn's attitude toward labor organizations, Mr. Rowe said, struck at the very heart of law religion and order. The British people had enjoyed for generations the right to choose a Party Minister could forbid men from joining unions, but Premier Hepburn could forbid them joining another. Some other and more reckless leader might attempt to prevent them from joining the Orange Order or the Roman Catholic Church.

JAPANESE BOMB NATIVE SHANGHAI

More Than 200 Killed And 400 Wounded Today

Shanghai, Aug. 28 (AP) — More than 600 non-combatants were killed or wounded and the whole of Shanghai was plunged into fresh terror today by Japanese bombing squadrons.

Mayor O. K. Yui announced 200 persons were killed and 400 injured when 150 bombs and numerous rains of explosives into the crowded Nantao quarter adjoining the French concession and the native city.

Besides the normal population of the Chinese business and residential section, thousands of natives had taken refuge there.

The attackers, divided into squadrons of four ships each, swept over the sector several times, leaving a field of death and destruction a half-mile square.

INVADED COTTAGE TO LOOK FOR WIFE INQUEST IS TOLD

William J. Hamilton , Now Dead Caused Death of Mrs. George Buck

STEPDAUGHTER DEAD

Says Man Chased Her While Mother Hid Under Bed

Parry Sound, Ont., Aug. 28 (CP)—A shocking tale, in the hands of William James Hamilton" who is himself now dead, caused the death of Mrs. George Buck of Toronto, a coroner's jury decided last night. If Mrs. Hamilton lurked a deserted cottage at Manbert, 40 miles north of here, Wednesday.

Evidence showed Hamilton, 62-year-old Toronto labor leader, chased Mrs. Buck across the shoreben when he broke into the cottage in search of his estranged wife. Mrs. Hamilton, granted a court order Tuesday, three days after she had left her husband at a distance, was hiding under a bed when he killed Mrs. Buck.

Hamilton is believed to have previously killed himself with a shotgun, touched only on the death of Mrs. Buck, staying at the cottage occupied by Mrs. Hamilton.

Called as a witness, Mrs. Hamilton said she had not seen her husband for more than a year. He called on her Tuesday morning with a note saying he was sharpening a razor to cut his throat. The action frightened her, she explained, and the train stop near their house and Mrs. Buck "hurry" her back to the cottage fill in the water.

Mrs. Hamilton told of Mrs. Buck's scream when Hamilton came to the front door. She called down to her adopted daughter, "Run for help, run for help here," and hid beneath a bed. She heard her daughter and "open that door" and then the smashing of a door.

The girl, Jean Cunningham, told how Hamilton, when refused admittance, smashed down the door. She escaped through the back door and ran for help. She returned and found her mother dead on the floor. She called down to her adopted father, "Run for help here." I ran, and hid beneath a bed. She heard her father

CLASS OF 1917 HOLDS REUNION

Matriculation Class of "B. H. S." Forms Permanent Organization

Twenty years were bridged in the space of a few minutes last night when members of the 1917 matriculation graduating class of Belleville Collegiate Institute, then known as the Belleville High School, held their first collective meeting at the banquet held in the Hotel Quinte. Organization of the alumni of this wartime group of students resulted one of the features of the reunion with Dr. Harry Cassidy, Norwood, elected president, Mrs. Allure, Belleville, secretary, and T. Wills, Belleville, treasurer.

Reminiscences of the school days of long ago brought back a great deal of the time and many old time occurrences were revived.

Every member of the twenty present was allotted five minutes to tell former classmates of what has occurred during the period since graduation. The meeting was greatly enjoyed by all present and many old ties and friendships received a new lease of life through the first "get-together" of this class of people of twenty years ago.

Mr. F. C. MacLaurin, principal of the school, was present and renewed old acquaintances with his former pupils. Some of those came from Windsor and Toronto to attend the first gathering of their classmates.

OLD DAYS AND NEW

"Ooh, sure, and Holmes has changed," sighed Tim Flanagan the other day to his friend Sandy MacTavish. "I raymimber in the ould days whin we'd be back in Holmesville and we used to go to the fairs. There was the cattle an all there, and there was the horses. We used to drove the ould low-backed cyars wid the canvas tops an sthuff them for dear joife. Then the bhoys would all git togither an the big fight performance of the day would begin. They was minny a sore head handled an thin days and somehow or other nobody seemed much hurted. But the fun was the part of the regular programs it seemed. In fact, Tim wagged a grimy finger under his friend's nose, "it wasn't a fair unless we put several min in the hospital."

"Aye, lad," returned Sandy, "twas a bonny sight to see the lads and lassies and the men folk dressed up a-goin' to the fair. But I don't know, lads like other things have improvit with the times. Every country has its own method of puttin' on the fair now of this pertickular, and I'll be blithered if the idea we have here in Ontario is not the bonniest.

"Now, Ol agree wit yer on that point," returned his friend. "and furthermore the advancements made by this wireless, cable, modern science and other gadgets has improved the general entertainment value to the point that a fotght is out of the question. But thin days has gone forever and even the most rabid son of Erin forgives his inmates at fair totins and enjoys himself to the limit. I'm afraid the ould Donegals has gone forever."

"Aye, and to they should," returned Sandy, "after all, Tim, we are Irish in modern times, and school adopt cowels to the many changes. It's a wee bit too much to inpect the fair people to abide by the auld-fashioned methods. Folks like modern things, and after all I hae an idea that these newfangled notions are the best after all."

"Begorry, ye'r right, Sandy," exclaimed Tim. "In the ould days the fair ground had the rumain' of thing operated the fairs along Dundas street. There was a ferris wheel, a merry-go-round, a hully-gully, a rapid-tendants for the past number of years, and last year's fair was one of the best we ever seen. It had shoot everything a man could wish to see along the fairway line, the cops and the horse were wonderful and so were the lower exhibits. The entertainment was superb and in the whole it was a distinct credit to the fellow who run it, and also the fairmers who helped by their fine exhibits to make it such a grand success."

"Sure Sandy," an' yers rought about that. But the year, they still me it is a-goin' to be better than ever. Why, rokht now, they have more intries in the livestock classes and other things, that is way ahead of any year in the history of the fair. Thin again, and the point I like about it is the intertainment. They tell me the directors have imported a show that is raied aloond to none. There will be bands too, and thin bagpipes of yours that yes love so much."

"Aye, laddie", rejoined Sandy, "but not only have the fairgrounds contributed to the fair, but the city merchants have taken on an added interest this year, and their display will be one that will warm the cockles of yer hairt. Then there are the bahvies of the schools, the women of the farms and towns, they too have contributed to make the fair this year one of the best in the province."

"Ye're not forgittin' the ponies are ye, Sandy," asked his friend. "They till me the horsemen have entries from some of the fotnest stables in the country. Imagine three days of racin' and me an ould horseman."

"And whin Ol git me fill of watchin' the ponies, be Japers, there's that performance at nokht what the ould woman and the kids is rahin' aloond. That will be a sagnificent sceln', and yes can bet ye're bottom dollar, Ol'll be there."

"Ye are richt, Tim, with such an institution in our midst bein' run by a capable group of hard-work-in' min, every citizen in this fair city of ours should show their appreciation of their efforts to make the Fair one of the best in Ontario by boosting it this year by attending it. They will not only get their money's worth but they will be supportin' one of the finest things we folks in the rural communities have built up."

POLICE BLOTTER

Charges of reckless driving and also of operating a car with defective brakes were today laid against William Lazarick, Thurlow, following an accident at the intersection of McDonald Ave., and Dundas St. yesterday afternoon.

Police allege Lazarick was driving easterly on Dundas St., collided with the rear of another motor car, being driven in front of him by Fred Stanley of this city. The force of the impact into the rear of Mr. Hawley's car knocked it up on the curb as he was about to make a lefthand turn at McDonald Ave.

Traffic Officer Ellis investigated and stated today Mr. Lazarick's car had acidded a distance of 75 feet before colliding with Mr. Hawley's car. The brakes of Lazarick's car were tested and found to be defective, police revealed today.

Belleville police have been asked to check-up on the practice of young boys riding their bicycles on the sidewalks of the city. This practice is becoming a menace and dangerous to the pedestrians, police stated today. No warnings will be given in such cases, charges to be laid in all instances where the guilty culprits are convicted, they say.

DIAMOND RING LOST IN LAKE

Jack McLaughlin of This City Has Misfortune at Dickie Lake

It wasn't bad enough to have a week's vacation spoiled by rain which teemed down every day, but the loss of a diamond ring valued at three hundred and fifty dollars just about climaxed what Jack McLaughlin, proprietor of the May fair Beauty Salon, thinks is the height of ill-luck.

Added to this misfortune was the temporary loss of an outboard motor which really was the cause of the major calamity McLaughlin and his wife wasted his hands slipped the ring from his finger and placed it in his shirt pocket.

Later while out on Dickie Lake, the outboard motor slipped from its position at the rear of the boat and sank. McLaughlin grabbed frantically at the disappearing motor. There came a slight splash and three hundred and fifty dollars worth of diamond ring sank from view.

The motor was retrived later but no sign of the ring could be found.

PRICES ARE FIRM ON CITY MARKET

Fine Display of Fruit And Vegetables Available Today

EGGS HIGHER

Any qualms felt by prospective patrons of the Belleville Fair regarding the quality of farm and dairy products at the fair should be dispelled this morning, that is if the quality of the display of vegetables and other farm and dairy products at the city market are any criterion. Once again Saturday morning shoppers were treated to a bountiful supply of the best in farm and dairy in a variable exhibit that could not help but please the most fastidious shopper. Piles of vegetables, and fruits, fresh and canned, were crammed practically every available space and housewives of the city had a field day taking advantage of the fine prices offered to stock their family larders for the week end.

Fruit in Abundance

A general survey of the market this morning showed a fine selection that prices maintained a firm level. Vegetables in general showed no appreciable difference in price over those of a week ago. Fruits held their own, however, showing a slight increase.

Pears, peaches, plums and home grown melons help the fruit spoiler-heading a fine display of fruits. Varying in size and quality the pears were selling at the market basket lots at forty and fifty-five cents each. Damson plums sold to a brisk market for thirty cents per basket lot with the remainder sold at forty and forty-five cents each. Small green gages fetched a similar price with Saturday morning shoppers and sold readily the baskets of the fruit per six quart basket and the eleven quart containers at seventy-five cents.

Melons

Canteloupes and watermelons were available in large quantities and in varying sizes. The former were quoted at from ten cents up although a very select few were available at five cents. High and low priced fruit in the watermelon class were quoted at from ten cents to thirty-five.

Duchess apples in fancy containers and showing plenty of color were selling at twenty cents. Mcintosh, imported from the Niagara peninsula, were offered at twenty-five cents. Autumn Strawberries at one dollar per hamper lot with Wolf Rivers selling at the same price. The popular Yellow Transparent apples at forty cents per peck.

Tomatoes were fairly plentiful and maintained a firm tone with bushel lots quoted at fifty cents and basket lots at forty and twenty cents. Cucumbers were plentiful with large slicers selling at ten cents per dozen and the gherkin variety at twenty-five cents per six quart basket.

Sweet Corn

Sweet corn prices remained unchanged in spite of the large supply available. Fifteen cents per dozen and two dozen ears for twenty-five cents were the popular prices. Potatoes held firm at the former weekend prices and were quoted at seventy-five and eighty cents per bushel lot. Peck lots were offered at twenty cents.

Cauliflower and cabbage of a fine quality were quoted at ten cents per cents upwards. Vegetable marrow and pumpkin were varied in price according to size. Other vegetables such as beets, carrots, onions and late radishes sold well at five cent prices.

Dairy Products

A fine display of dairy produce was available in the inside market. Eggs were slightly up in price although many quotations were made by vendors. While the general price quoted was twenty-seven cents for "A" select a number of vendors held out for thirty cents. Mediums were offered at twenty-three and twenty-five cents. Farmers butter noted a slight raise in some quarters, vendors charging sixty and sixty-five cents for two pound rolls. Some stores disposed of prints at fifty-five cents and thirty cents per pound. Two chickens proved popular with Saturday morning shoppers, selling at from one dollar to one dollar and fifteen cents per pair. Fowl was quoted at from fifty cents and one dollar, prices ranged in price from seventy-five cents each.

Honey in the comb was offered at twenty cents per pound strained variety quoted at ten cents per pound in different quantities.

Whiteface and brown eggs cents a pound to vendors, with lake trout selling at twenty-five cents and a small quantity of freshly caught pike offered at ten cents per pound.

Automobile Collides With Light Democrat

Vegetables were strewn in all directions across the highway after an automobile, driven by Charles Hollingsworth, Maxmore, collided with a democrat, driven by Newton Mabee, 79 year old Frankford resident on Highway No. 14 two miles north of Stirling early last evening.

The elderly Frankford resident was driving a horse and democrat, loaded with vegetables for Saturday's market, towards home when Mr. Hollingsworth collided with the rear of the horse-drawn vehicle. The force of the impact not only demolished the wagon, but resulted in the vegetables being strewn for some considerable distance along the highway.

Provincial Constable Wm. McBrien investigated and was informed by Mr. Hollingsworth that prior to the accident he had met a motor vehicle carrying one light and immediately upon his passing this vehicle he observed suddenly upon the horse-drawn democrat. Mr. Mabee stated he was carrying a lighted lantern in his hand at the time of the accident, but the driver of the automobile assured the investigating officer he did not see any light displayed. The lantern was found some distance from the wreck and in the vegetables being strewn for some considerable distance along the highway.

Constable McBrien stated charges of reckless driving had been preferred against Hollingsworth, however.

Canada's Market Story Told in Vivid Charts

Profound Study of Our People's Production, Earning And Buying Power Made Simple in Research Committee's Report.

The Canadian people, what they do, produce, earn and buy, and how they live, is the subject of a book entitled "Canada's Market" recently compiled by John R. Macmillan, the chairman of the Research Committee of the daily newspapers of Canada.

The authors explain that the book was prepared to meet a definite need for facts about Canada. Under modern business conditions the contact any size organization makes with its potential markets is of constant statistical. What is the population of a given district? What is the standard of living? What is the buying power of the people? What is the best month by which they can be reached?

These questions and many others are answered in the book which unquestionably will make it easier for buyer and advertiser alike to evaluate sales opportunities in all parts of the Dominion.

It is not an ordinary book of statistics. The authors state that because of an aversion to figures foreign languages to people not trained in figures, they have as their objective in planning "The Canadian Market" was to present statistical data in as simple a form as standard. There can be no doubt that the objective has been established. Facts about Canada are not presented by long, dull columns of figures, but by clear, bright almost gay symbols. Statistics have been metamorphosed into pictures.

Six Principal Sections

For the purpose of this study of the Canadian market the book has been divided into six principal sections. The first deals with Canada as a whole. The others present similar information but deal specifically with the five economic areas, the Maritime Provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairie Provinces and British Columbia. Each section is complete in itself and draws an accurate picture of the section with which it deals. The importance of this treatment to sales executives interested in specific markets can be readily appreciated. At the same time it permits comparisons to be made of the importance of each economic zone in the general scheme of Canada's economic growth.

Perhaps it is to pointed out in the book markets are not locations on the map, but groups of people willing and able to buy. Because of certain limitations of income, the whole market, with the exception of Canada. The rural and urban distribution of retail sales for the twenty years 1917, 1921, 1926 and 1931 and the population estimates for the intervening years provide comparison of growth or decline in the towns, cities and rural districts.

More important sales and advertising statistics, however, is the enlargement of this population picture. This is the breakdown by sex and age classifications. As the changing sex and age classifications definitely influence the number of families, and consequently the purchasing power, this information makes it possible to forecast future buying trends.

Shift of Population

It is of interest also from the merchandising point of view that the book indicates how there is a gradually shifting from the rural to urban centres. The population charts indicate that whereas 46 per cent of the people lived in the rural districts in 1871 only approximately 24 per cent of the population was to be found in the urban districts.

The book draws an interesting comparison of the volume of British and foreign investments in Canada. Canada's interest in money invested in Canadian government securities, railways and general, industrial enterprises. Though it is generally known that other countries have invested large sums of money in Canada, more than seven billion dollars in fact, how many people know that Canadians have invested two billion dollars abroad?

Canadian production is dealt with, entirely because of its great importance on national wealth and prosperity. Two sets of charts are devoted to show the value of production over an 11-year period, while their ratio to primary and secondary production is graphically described. Here again is popular belief is dispelled. The charts reveal that the lowest ebb in the depression period was not reached in 1932, as is generally believed, but in 1933 and 1934 production in all industries was increasing rapidly.

The Regional View

Anyone examining the Canadian market cannot but be impressed by the need to think regionally in terms of sales and packaging in Canada. All comparative charts in the book emphasize the wide differences existing between most of the economic zones, differences in population, in the type of homes in which they live, in occupational groups and in buying power.

Other features of national life portrayed by the 38 double-paged charts and more than 60 pages of text are the distribution of the fully employed, the tenure and size of households, the volume of retail trade, the education of Canadians, and analysis of budget expenditures of typical families in three income classifications.

The book thoroughly analyzes the Canadian market, drawing information from the most authoritative sources. Such a comprehensive bibliography is given for those who wish to pursue a more complete study of the Canadian market. It takes the Canadian reader to places, if you will, and puts it together again offering concrete suggestions as to how sales and merchandising campaigns can be planned to produce the greatest results.

In the analysis of media coverage and the task which confronts the charts on this subject "The Canadian Market" presents conclusively the efficiency of the Canadian daily newspapers in reaching the Canadian public with any sales message. More than two and one-quarter million Canadian newspapers are bought every day. "The Canadian Market" is another link in the chain which the Canadian daily newspapers have welded in the service of every individual and every industry. It is fully in keeping with the service ideals which have actuated the daily newspaper, each in its own community, for more than a century.

Miss Dora Mawerey is spending holidays at her home here.

Mr. and Mrs. John Darlington spent the tea hour on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Milt Bowers. Later Mr. and Mrs. Bowers and Hazel and Mr. and Mrs. Darlington motored to Consecon and spent the evening at the home of Mr. P. Babcock.

Little Jean Babcock of Consecon is spending a few days at the home of Mrs. Milton Bowers.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was in the living room bailancing the blue ashtray on my left knee, when I thought I could walk in case I ever decks to be a literoge walker. I got a reputation for it.

Then I got a reputation for bein' a nut, I was thinking, O, I dont see how I can do it, when I suddenly also finds it out for herself, so I better tell her and then may be she'll help me. Then it's a good time to tell her rite now, while I'm in a safer hurry pit, being dressed to go out, so she won't have much time to think, I figgered.

And I went in ma's room and she was in there on the bed, watching herself put her hat on. "Ma," I says, "I got to tell you a hurry."

"Then, said, and I said, O, I thought you was.

So I was, but I've changed my mind and now I'm in the mood to tell you. Why, what's on your mind? she says, and I says, I got a secret, I thought you wasn't in a hurry.

I am, said, and I said, and I said, I mean I thought you was.

If you cant make sense when you talk better I'm sure you will not heard, ma said. Have you been drinking or is you in love or your abs said, and I said. Yes mama, I think we're all out of gins but I can get some at the drug store around the corner, I said.

Glad I did I say we needed some gin said, and I said, No mam, I'm in love with you so me and the blue ashtray, it's in 2 perfect pieces.

QUEBEC, TOO, HAS A WAY

Quebec Province has figured out its highway losses in the past five years at 1417 lives, 25,000 injured and $70,000,000 in economic loss.

"Learn and live" is the motto of the special campaign in which the sister province's Safety League and affiliated safety organizations have adopted with the backing of municipal and provincial government authorities. Ontario has its "Try Courtesy Campaign", Quebec uses the phrase, "Learn and Live", a healthy twist of the old phrase "Live and learn."

There is to be a perambulating clinic or safety school for drivers and for citizens in general. Educational school cars will tour that province, distributing literature telling how to prevent accidents.

Montreal Gazette commending the campaign remarks, "Traffic accidents and fatalities can be checked by warnings, arrests and fines; but there cannot be a traffic officer for every motorist on the highway. A supplementary, and perhaps more beneficial, service can be rendered through enlarging and extending in the manner proposed an educational plan of campaign which the safety leagues began long ago to direct the average motor driver to a constant exercise of prudence, to an unfailing courtesy and to an undeviating observance of traffic laws and regulations and likewise at the same time developed safety-mindedness amongst all classes of the community."

THE WORLD DISTURBANCE

War in such a place as the Orient where West has come to the East is bound to bring unusual undesirable events. Such a one has taken place in the wounding of the British ambassador by Japanese airmen with the result of strained relations and the creation of a feeling of unrest in all parts of the world.

Meanwhile the serious situation is in the hands of the diplomats. Japan has expressed regret at the occurrence and a British note has been sent to Tokyo.

The situation in the ancient modern Shanghai where East and West meet is one which is fraught with possibilities of danger. Foreign nations have large interests centred there.

Today every form of unrest and every clash that is possible is being enacted somewhere.

TRACING WORLD CURRENTS

Bottles have many uses, most of them concerned with the contents of the said bottles whether they hold champagne, catsup, castor oil, or vinegar. A world without glass bottles would not be just the same as it is.

But there are empty bottles too. These with a cork in are particularly useful in sending messages by water. Some time ago a hunded bottles were dumped into the ocean off Newfoundland and being empty and corked were caught in the Gulf Stream and left to drift any way whither this might be borne. Now they are beginning to make their appearance on the European coast and so define the course of currents which move in the Atlantic. They have a leisurely way of getting about but reach their destination and serve thus a good purpose.

A GALLIC MONUMENT

In France they pride themselves on their sense of measure. The philosophers who fish so disinterestedly in the Seine or read the moldy books they never sell in the near-by bookstalls will explain for hours, to anybody who has time to listen, that only in France is there a remnant of the feeling for proportion, the "nothing too much" that made the Parthenon, the logic of Aristotle, Plato's dream republic. It's hard to find much balance today in the fine old tree-planted Third Republic, yet where but in France would the citizenry pause amid conflicts and alarms to erect an obelisk to the discoverer of red currant jelly?

Red currant jelly is one of those delicate refinements on nature in which French genius excels. The best red currant on the bush has a brief and local season. It leaves but a transient tartness on the tongue. Jelly, in such apotheosis of its essence as the ecstatic chef achieves, it is something else again, of a color as glowing as the ruby glass of Chartres, of a flavor at once pungent and smooth, like the little rosy wines of Anjou. Naturally, it was a French talent that imagined the final bloom of the red currant, glorifying the wild duck and adding tang and elegance to the homely gigot. And naturally it is a French sense of values that celebrated the talent of Perrin Lamothe by dedicating a monument in his honor last Sunday in his native village of Velaines-en-Barrois, in the valley of the Meuse. The French understand that the generals and the reformers, the Joffres and Jaures of successive wars and social upheavals, don't make the dent on life and human habit that is left by the revolutionists who first turn water into wine and currants into jelly.—New York Times.

UNUSUAL WEATHER

That August in Maine it was frightfully hot;
And when it was hopeless to hunt for a spot
Relieved by a breeze that could carry a feather
The residents gasped, 'Most unusual weather!'

In Texas it blew like three cyclones in one;
And when with the wind and the dust and the sun
Our faces were tanned to the color of leather
The ranchers pronounced it "Unusual weather."

Last March in Ohio it certainly poured;
And when from the mountains the cataracts roared,
Submerging the riversides, upper and nether,
The citizens called it "Unusual weather."

Of course California is parfect all year;
But if it should freeze in the Winter you'll hear
The Native Sons gallantly chanting together
The popular chorus, "Unusual weather."

RADIUM HAS BEEN ADDED TO THE ROMANCE OF MINING, and hard-bitten prospectors who could never see anything in radium hunting before are now keen on the subject. One of the most interesting and unusual type prospectors is Mrs. Josie Bishop, a widow with four grown children. Twenty years ago she lit on California's Mojave Desert with the customary can of beans, bread and bacon and proceed up up a homestead and mining claim. She owns a patch of mining territory near Red Rock Canyon, and her title was confirmed in recent litigation. On her land is an extremely rich deposit of radium bearing ore, one of the richest ever discovered, it is said, assaying 130 milligrams of radium per ton. Present price of radium is $25 per milligram, $25,000 per gram, $700,000 per ounce.

CHICAGO NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION STUNT consisted of catching a number of pike and pickerel, labelling them and releasing in nearby lakes. One thousand fish to all were tagged with a five dollar and upward. The leading prize winners were "Oscar" and "Fanny," pickerel, $500 and $200. Sporting goods stores raised the ante by contributing additional prizes until "Oscar" was worth $1,330.50, with $820.90 bid for 'Fanny'. Crowds of fishermen flocked to the lakes designated and summer resort proprietors and hot dog stands flourished. Oscar was caught by a young Bell Telephone employee named John D. Muller, who did not know that he had caught a thousand dollar fish until the next morning when he started to clean "Oscar" and found the identification tag. What a glorious surprise. Fifty of the prize fish had been caught up to last week but Fanny was still at large.

LATEST NEWS FROM GERMANY is that Dictator Hitler has placed a ban on Rotary Clubs as being too liberal in their membership and ideas. Rotary survived with free speech longer than other organizations in Germany where service clubs, secret societies and churches all came under the ban. There is only one voice in Germany and that must be obeyed. Der Fuerher speaks and thinks for all the people of Germany and if as a man thinketh so is he and Germany is thinking as one man what a national think that would be. However, if Hitler thinks for the nation that is no sign of what the nation thinks of him and as he tightens the dictator chains about his hapless subjects the thinking will go deeper and perhaps produce results not favorable to the dictator. All of which should remind us to be grateful we are living in a free country and give us a greater pride in the British flag and British ideals.

A bill board now faces the street in its stead and nobody but a hole in the ground remains on the site. The late Dr. Holden and the late Mr. James Jamieson were in their time occupants of the house.

Letters to the Editor

COURAGE IN DROUGHT

The Manse, Radville, Sask., August 22, 1937.

To the Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer,

Dear Sir,—In these days of dust, drought, wind and grasshoppers, Saskatchewan is crying: "How are the people of the drought area standing up under the sledge-hammer blows that Nature has dealt them during the past eight years? What have their still standing on their feet, looking with hope toward another year?" My answer to all these questions, an answer that I have found to be very satisfying, is found in one word, and that word is GOD.

I am glad to find that my answer is corroborated in a little poem entitled "My Job" printed, written by Gertrude Wood, President of the Oldsberg Associate Society, Saskatchewan. It is a poem that breathes the spirit of Faith and Hope, Courage and Love, and finds "through Faith's clear eyes the Light in the skies."

It is in the hope that this little poem may prove a blessing to many, both in the drought area and in other parts of Canada, that I send it forth.

Lord, help me to forget the bare brown fields,
Storm-tortured, dry, wind swept, bereft of yields,
Let me not watch the stock dejected pass,
The sloughs are dry as rock; there is no grass.
Let me not think all day of garden plots
Where dusty ridges play, but plants are not.
Let me but see the trees, their leaves are green
And birds still nest in these and sing unseen.
Help me to raise my eyes for this is June
See white puffed June-like skies and hear a tune.
Though as I gaze dust clouds—a yellow pall—

Sweep up and with dim shroud envelop all.
Yet, Lord, my heart must rise these clouds above
And find through Faith's clear eyes that God is Love.
With such a spirit of Faith to help them, the people of the drought area will emerge triumphant.

Thank you, Mr. Editor, for giving space to this.

Gratefully yours,
(Rev.) J. T. Cawthrop.

NEWS and VIEWS
—by—
G. M. JAMES
Special Exhibition Feature

The Canadian National Exhibition as Toronto adds one or more new features to its lengthy programme almost every year to maintain and increase continental interest. In this way the swimming Marathon, the popular exhibit of pets, and many others have been introduced, and then subsequently retained. This year the New Feature is none other than an exhibit of Postage Stamps, loaned by private collectors from all over Canada and the United States, as well as exhibits by the governments of three respective countries whose stamps are emphatically the most popular and whose costs to collectors run in the aggregate into many millions of dollars. Most important Canadian collectors to-day are devoting their time and money to the acquisition of unused stamps, first of Canada, then of other parts of the British Empire. The American collector prefers United States unused stamps first, and then those of Canada, as the annual tourist trade demonstrates. All governments encourage the preference for unused stamps to the utmost; in Canada it means a net profit in the post-office department of over a million dollars a year, but nevertheless for only five per cent. of Canada's stamps are reasonably perfect as far as the mechanical process of production is concerned. This twelve per cent. likewise ably with other proud, dignified countries.- Canadian collectors feel this unnecessary humiliation due to neglect very keenly, and are organizing to bring about proper remedies.

In the United States the art of studying and collecting postage stamps is taught and encouraged in their various schools for their great educational value in history, geography and art. Canada not being completely original usually follows her American cousins in the matter of time fix worthy innovations. What was the source of inspiration for our large nickels, and for our small money bills? Canada meekly owns many other similar debts for intelligent imitations.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE

An exhibit of postage stamps from collectors and governments over a wide area involves much labour and responsibility. Hence it was necessary to place such a valuable feature under the direct care of a committee, and a committee of forty, who would collect, insure and advertise this new feature.

TWELVE PENNY BLACK

The writer was one of the first to be invited to place an exhibit at the committee's request, because he owned the world famous penny black of 1852, in Canada, and he resided only a little over a hundred miles from Toronto. The chairman made a special visit to Belleville to arrange the details and for about a dozen of the finest dollar stamps in the collection in the owner's name on that coveted stamp during the period of his absence from Belleville.

A BELLEVILLE STAMP EXHIBIT FOR TORONTO

This absolutely perfect twelve penny stamp with four other earliest Canadians was artistically arranged in a frame fourteen inches by eighteen inches. At the top is printed in large letters "Canada's First Stamps". Under this heading four stamps appear at the corners of an ornamental square, while in the centre of this square appears the sombre, majestic stamp which is marked "Rare, 1852" in red ink for emphasis, and which is worth hundreds of times its weight in gold and diamonds. At the bottom of the frame is a small photo, and near it the words "Owner, Mr. C. M. James, Belleville, Ontario".

WIDELY ADVERTISED

This precious exhibit will be taken to the Toronto Exhibition and handed over personally by the owner, who has a standing offer of One Yort of five thousand dollars for his stamp, the second rarest in the world. The chairman previously referred to stated that this exhibit would have the most prominent position, and that it would have special electric lighting like a famous picture. The important dailies of Canada and the United States are invited to visit the Stamp Exhibit, and have special references to its lucky Belleville owner. Thousands will come to Toronto to see this stamp, and for a time the Quinte will be overshadowed. A few months ago, it will be remembered, Mr. James and Belleville were mentioned over the radio in connection with his now famous twelve penny black.

A STAMP DESCRIPTION

Many have become interested in this rare stamp, and, as insurance regulations prevent it being shown except under strict supervision and at certain hours, a description now follows. The stamp is jet black, and has a straight edge because the first stamps in all countries were printed in sheets without perforations between the stamps with the result that they had to be cut apart with scissors. This twelve penny stamp has perfect margins because the one who cut apart the sheets in 1852 did a wonderfully perfect job. Many stamps separated from the sheet by scissors have been horribly ragged by close cutting, often cutting away part of the design on one or more sides. The design is a lovely portrait (head and shoulders) of Queen Victoria when she was young, and at the bottom appears "Twelve Pence". In each of the four corners of the stamp the figure "12" and above the Queen's head "Canadian Postage". The cancellation is so light that this stamp is practically in unused condition, a feature which along with its perfect margins render it superb from a collector's standpoint. For the years 1851 to 1857 and perhaps somewhat later, Canada's official cancellation of stamps consisted of several rings, one within the other (concentric), at uniform distances apart, becoming larger from the centre outward for an inch or about equal to a dime. This is the surest test of Canada's earliest stamps. On the whole Canada's twelve penny black is one of the most dignified and artistic stamps that the world has ever known.

RARE STAMPS

It is commonly believed that the rarer a stamp or coin is very old that it must necessarily be of great value. This fallacy causes dealers so much trouble that it is necessary to give specific details.

1. The first stamp issued anywhere in the world was the one penny black, England, in 1840, but so many millions of these stamps were used and now still in existence that to-day they are worth only about one dollar. This proves that supply determines value in stamps as in other things. If the available supply is large, the stamp is cheap, but if the supply is limited, like Jubilee and Coronation stamps, the value may become greater and greater as time goes on.

2. All Banks of Canada in their early days issued copper and penny coins called "Bank Tokens" and millions of them were put in circulation with the result that although the Banks long ago discontinued their circulation, there are still many of these coins in the hands of dealers and collectors. Under such conditions they may never be worth much over face value. Many copper, silver and gold coins for similar reasons can never become extremely valuable.

3. One of the oldest stamp dealers in Canada resides in Toronto, and has been the writer's best pal for forty years. One day not long ago the writer was in his place of business, and overheard the following typical conversation between a lady caller and my pal.

"Here are some old Canadian stamps which are very valuable," she proclaimed almost dramatically as she threw them on the counter. How much will you give me for them?"

"They are not as valuable perhaps as you think, lady," replied my pal after a brief, expert examination, as he bit and chewed nervously on the end of a green tobacco cigar half consumed.

"That's what all you dealers in Toronto say, and yet you buy stamps at your own price as Rockefeller bought his neighbors' oil-fields. You know the last commandment, and yet flourish mightily. Well how much are they worth anyway?"

"Your stamps are old all right, but common because millions were used, and many of these are being found everywhere. About one-third of them are useless for collections because they are torn, creased badly or very heavily cancelled. I could pay you two dollars for what I can use."

"Well, of course, it does seem different than I thought the way you explain it, and I will accept your offer," said the lady much subdued and enlightened.

"You found these stamps at no cost, and it is like finding money, better even than selling your old jewelry. In Toronto you get only fourteen dollars an ounce for old gold, while the market value is nearly three times that amount. Stamp dealers have no reason to be ashamed of their methods," concluded my honest pal with a smile that indicated a clear conscience.

4. The James Twin receive many letters almost daily containing a few dirty, torn stamps not worth a three cent stamp for their return but that stamp is rarely enclosed. They ask in return many things of value including money! one such letter from Newfoundland recently requested two hundred postal fee indicators. Rare, too, are unused envelopes, because many send stamps for expert valuation without a "thank you" or even return postage and registration.

HISTORY OF BELLEVILLE'S RARE STAMP

The history of Belleville's superb twelve penny black was printed in The Ontario Intelligencer about a year ago and later under the title of "Romance of a Postage Stamp" in pamphlet form sent to any subscriber at ten cents per copy. These have gone out and are still going out to all parts of the world and have made Belleville, Ontario, famous city. Most of the important libraries on this continent have procured one or more copies and still the interest grows.

A special request sent to the main points of this remarkable story now follow.

FAMOUS STAMP STORY

The first stamps issued in Canada were of three denominations, the three penny red (beaver design) for prepayment of letters within Canada, the six penny blue (Prince Consort design) for letters to England and to the United States. Millions of these two stamps were used, and they are not very valuable to-day as a result.

The twelve penny black (Queen Victoria design) was used on letters from Canada to England and were in use a very short time because the rate was soon reduced and the new stamps were issued. Millions of the twelve penny black stamps on hand, and later these were destroyed to the last stamp. Most of the stamps bearing these numbers were destroyed in England long before the facts of extermination became known. Only a few are left in existence, and their possessors prize them far above gold, rubies or diamonds. But what will happen if G. M. James of Belleville refuses to sell his twelve penny black? Here is the startling piece of paper that you would scarcely deign to pick up off the floor; but which is worth the last dollar of eight per cent. on such a transaction in Toronto, or in New York?

A GRANDFATHER BETTERS

When my grandfather retired on ample pension from the Civil Service at Ottawa, he came to live with us in Belleville only days as the home of his daughter (the writer's mother) a few miles west of Toronto. My grandfather had died several years previously, and my grandmother lonely and old, but still vigorous physically and mentally, decided to come to Canada. She came over George's River in the Atlantic liner Europa on the usual simple, old-fashioned name. Naturally his namesake became his favorite grandchild, and ever since I have blessed his memory. He was a lover of books, and I have inherited my grandfather's fondness, and brought forth my stamp-album at the earliest opportunity. Then I found that the Canada Stamp Exhibit in Toronto was for the first and only time, this wizard book of mine would fall me and lose its magic charm.

Grandfather, like my boy, this is wonderful: I never saw anything so neat and artistic in all my life. A few of my friends at Oxford have stamps on their letters, but not a book proud of you, my grandson.

So saying he placed his arm around me and drew me close to his side and My joy was unspeakable, and I was glad that I had tried so long and hard to please him. I can't believe it or not, nothing had really happened yet.

"Let me see," said grandfather in a whisper to himself with eyes half shut directed upward at the ceiling. "Did I place those old papers and envelopes in the bottom drawer of the dining-room table?" He was shouted after a short pause at the same time striking the table with his disengaged hand with such force that some dishes on the sideboard fell down.

For a few days I was in great suspense and excitement but at last "that day" arrived and I was called to hand by Father. Grandfather and I and My joy was unspeakable, and I was glad that I had tried so long and hard to please him. I can't believe it or not, nothing had really happened yet.

"Let me see," said grandfather in a whisper to himself with eyes half shut directed upward at the ceiling. "Did I place those old papers and envelopes in the bottom drawer of the dining-room table?" He was shouted after a short pause at the same time striking the table with his disengaged hand with such force that some dishes on the sideboard fell down.

For a few days I was in great suspense and excitement but at last "that day" arrived and I was called to hand by Father. Grandfather and I and papers proved to be a gold mine as one of the first stamps to meet my gaze, when grandfather produced my treasure book, was the rare twelve penny black, one of the rarest stamps in existence. My stamp was in perfect condition and only very lightly cancelled with the result that practically it was unused. The figure "12" and my stamp is valued at over five thousand dollars because only about a score of these stamps are known throughout the world. At least time I was unaware of its great value.

Grandfather never tired of selecting, arranging and mounting my stamps with me taking great interest in what was to happen next.

THE VICISSITUDES OF BUSINESS

Within a few short years dear old grandfather was dead, and I was in business in the city of Winnipeg. Naturally I needed more capital quickly with the alternative of failure and heavy loss. What was I to do? At last it occurred to me that I might sell my stamps, and thus win out. An advertisement was inserted in "The Free Press" as follows:

FOR SALE

An almost complete collection of Canadian Postage Stamps containing the rare 12d black. Phone 1128 for appointment.

Within a fortnight the collection, which for years had meant so much to me, was gone but my bank account was several thousand dollars better off and business not only went on but prospered. This happened about twenty-five years ago.

Recently the writer received a startling letter from the wealthy Winnipeg financier, who paid a large sum of money to promote the hobby with as little consideration as you would buy a dish of ice cream.

A VOICE FROM THE PAST

Dear Mr. James:

The depression (1929) has made me a poor man. I found it necessary to leave Winnipeg and all I owned was compulsorily possessed. It was a terrible blow but I am here in the heart of the fruit district of British Columbia on a small fruit farm where perhaps I can subsist for the time that still remains. I am building a modest home for which I require more capital than I possess; it is impossible to borrow here.

I still have your famous 12d black stamp and would like to sell it back to you because of the history that surrounds it. (you once told me about your wonderful grandfather) and also because some money would now mean so much to me. Name your own price and ask me to forward the stamp to your address.

With best wishes and kindest regards, I remain,

That letter thrilled me from tip to toe. What a multitude of happy memories it recalled! Certainly I bought back that stamp, the greatest treasure in the world to me now and I encouraged the mighty who had fallen in the serious financial way. There is a proverb universally, and hallowed sentiment about collecting postage stamps. Try it for yourself.

AMBITION'S LADDER

How can young people get a start in life in these critical days? In much the same way. There are still old papers and letters. It is now many years since a twelve penny black has been found, not nine sins as far as is known. These stamps rarely turn up on this side of the Atlantic as the distribution was the other way. But there are still many others to be located.

The writer would advise parents to start a boy in stamps about the age of ten. Teach him to buy one unused stamp for each kind issued in Canada, high values too, until he is a man ready for a chosen career. In fifteen or twenty years if he has one of every kind issued during that time, he will be able to sell at a handsome profit and receive a total sum that will get him somewhere. Each individual purchase made from time to time at the post-office is small in itself, but the total of Unused stamps increase in value fast and enormously and are always worth what they cost. It is impossible to lose by the plan. Do not children waste much to-day instead of adopting such a thrifty plan?

Nevertheless most people collect used stamps because they are cheaper and also because they get so many (as I did) from relatives. The writer will always be pleased to advise interested parties and remember that this story contains valuable suggestions for many boys and girls. They can attain their ideals if they have faith in themselves.

JUBILEE AND CORONATION STAMPS

Many who have taken the writer's advice concerning the limited issues of Jubilee and Coronation stamps can already sell at an immense profit. The future has much more in store for them.

REVELLER AIN TYRONE'S ANCESTRY

ONTARIO TORY LEADER TAKES LIFE SERIOUSLY

Mr. Rowe is methodical and doesn't waste words; "A strong, silent man," says writer.

Reproduced by permission of The Windsor Daily Star

Writing in The Windsor Daily Star, following the address given by the Honourable Earl Rowe, Provincial Conservative leader, in western Ontario, Eric Gibbs, staff writer, gives an interesting word picture of the forceful and dynamic Conservative leader.

His followers insist he is going to be the next Premier of Ontario, so his high time you met Hon Earl Rowe.

Doesn't Waste Words

It doesn't take you long to realize that he's mighty serious man, who in addition to his laconic manner, he's a determined man. He's not a fellow-man. He doesn't waste words. He just makes a straight statement of fact and when he comes to the end of the sentence he stops right there.

If it weren't such a trite phrase you might be apt to call Hon. Earl Rowe a "strong silent man." In addition to his laconic manner, he's a determined man. He's not a fellow-man. He doesn't waste words. He just makes a straight statement of fact and when he comes to the end of the sentence he stops right there.

Yet he's far from being a subjects in a serious way. There's nothing of the glib, wise-cracker about him.

In his bid for votes he might find it helpful to say he was born in a log cabin. But he makes no effort to conceal the fact that he was born in Hall, Iowa. He hastens to add, however, that his parents were both Canadian and never relinquished their citizenship. Young Earl was just a two-year-old when he accompanied his parents to Ontario.

He's the family name of Mervin Robinson, in Simcoe County, 43 miles northwest of Toronto. From a metropolitan standpoint Mervin Robinson isn't much of a place—just a cross-roads, in fact. On the corner there's the combined gas station and general store. On another corner there's a schoolhouse—believe it or not, it's both "little" and "district". Only a few feet away is the church on it. It used to be a Methodist church but now, of course, it's about his reconciliation, be cause he apparently hasn't anyunless you call getting up early in the morning an eccentricity.

Trial For His Aides

Those who travel with him find this early rising something of a trial. No matter what time he has gone to bed—10 p.m. or 2 a.m.—Mr. Rowe is always up and about by 6 or 7 o'clock in the morning. He finds it hard to understand why all these other people would want to be about in bed.

To illustrate just how little sleep he needs, his secretary beat the story of how he motored all night and without a second's sleep drove in three sulky races during the afternoon. He won the races, too.

He's a methodical sort of person. He seems to weigh all things carefully.

When he smiles it is a bright sunny flash of teeth but he doesn't do it very often. It isn't that he looks worried, either. It's simply that he's a serious subject in a serious way. There's nothing of the glib, wise-cracker about him.

Dad on Fourth Corner

There's one of the four corners we haven't accounted for yet. That's the one on which lives the elder Mr. Rowe. Nearly 70 years, in fact, comprising about 200 acres. He doesn't go in for onion planting like his neighbor farmer you could mention.

Mr. Rowe's specialty is horses and livestock. He's got Yorkshire hogs and shorthorn cattle, but it is more interesting when he's got 30 thoroughbred horses. Four or three are Hackneys and the rest are standard bred racing horses.

For years Mr. Rowe has made his living by raising fine horses. He's proud of his big stallion, Peter Rowe. Proud as he is perhaps a little unfortunate in view of Mr. Rowe's pledge to tighten up the liquor laws, but it doesn't seem to worry the Tory leader, because Peter Rowe's fine sire was a fine horse. His blood runs in the veins of Peter Chilcoot, which is presently raised one of the finest harness racing horses in the country.

Earl Rowe may hold it as an understatement to call Peter Chilcoot "one of the finest" harness racing horses, for it seems he has out-trotted just about every horse in the country. It is rumored that Mr. Rowe has refused $10,000 for the wonder trotter.

Not Shy On Horses

Talk to Mr. Rowe about himself and he'll be embarrassed, but get him on the subject of Peter Chilcoot he can really open up and becomes almost loquacious. For several years Mr. Rowe has gone from county fair to county fair with Peter Chilcoot. Precariously perched on a "sulky", the possible premier of Ontario has jogged round many a dirt track. With him sulky racing is more than sport—it is also a cash proposition. Like a certain well-known premier, Mr. Rowe believes in a pay-as-you-go policy. At least, that's how he has always operated. Every harness race he has gone after prize money and to-day the sulky is full of several election.

His athletic record is about as long and successful as his political one. He was married 30 years ago and has four children—Jean, 24; Bill, 13, and Lennox, 8.

Mr. Rowe's biggest business should be strictly controlled, but, on the other hand, he doesn't believe any government can successfully legislate what people shall eat or drink. This is to say he cannot believe in prohibition.

He smokes an occasional cigar or cigarette.

Hands Victory

Mr. Rowe finds sulky racing combines well with politics. For example, at Sarnia the other day Peter Chilcoot pounded to victory with many a voter's money resting on his nose. In one voice the racing fans cheered Premier Hepburn and Peter Chilcoot.

Though he seems quite happy to have been a livestock breeder and a sulky racer, Mr. Rowe admits that when he was younger he burned with the ambition to become a lawyer. He would have realized that ambition, too, if his health hadn't become a little shaky through too close application to head for law school. The doctor advised lots of fresh air, so Mr. Rowe became a farmer, like his father before him.

He followed in his father's footsteps when he became a Conservative. But his candidacy he made the decision by his own free judgment. Mr. Rowe made up his mind in 1911, when he was 17. The reciprocity question settled his political faith for all time. He distinctly remembers hearing a supporter of the late Sir John A. Macdonald point out that when trade flows east and west it helps build factories and smokestacks in the United States. From that time on he decided he would favor a tariff policy that would trade flowing east and west.

First Elected in 1918

In 1918 he was elected to the county council. In 1928 he entered the political arena for the first time as U.F.O. candidate during the days of the Drury administration. Mr. Rowe won, though Premier Drury came from the very next riding. The Tory leader was elevated into the federal field, and here again he was successful. At every election since then he has been returned as M.P. for Dufferin-Simcoe, increasing his majority each time.

He gets the title "Hon." by virtue of the fact he is a member of the Canadian Privy Council. He got it the year Bennett went out when he was made a member of the Bennett Cabinet as minister without portfolio during the last few months of the general election.

A Primrose Path

By GEORGE GULLOCK, JR.

McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service.

"Very neat ankles," thought Hans Brunn, as he glanced at the young lady who was with him on the train. Then abruptly one of the neat ankles twisted and Fate in a flower pot landed at his feet.

"Oh dear, my poor Primula Vulgaris," said the girl a little tearfully, as she eagle down to view the scattered remains of pot and plant.

Hans stooped to rake the dirt and injured flower onto the evening paper. "Primula Vulgaris, you were gypped. It's a primrose. My mother raised lots of 'em."

The girl smiled sweetly. "You mean—but the florist told me it was a Primula Vulgaris. Surely he should know—"

"Maybe he does," Hans agitated —"but maybe he doesn't. I'll swear it's a primrose. However, it might be a good bet for you to let the argument go till later and get this into something before the roots die of exposure."

A smile starting somewhere back in the pretty girl's face spread over it her lips. "Billy," she said, and looked so sweet that Hans knew he was going to like her even better than his mother's apple strudel.

They waited to her door. She hesitated. Hans turned the street it open.

Hans stopped—looked. "To think, you, Hans Brunn, have lived five doors from Heaven and never knew it. Miss Jones, never realized—Miss Jones, on behalf of the Amalgamated Primrose Society, Miss Malone, I wish to congratulate you on your ability to brighten your corner." They laughed. "I work in the curtain department, and I've just seen ways of flowers—maybe that accounts for it all," said Miss Jones.

The twisted ankle was swelling. Hans noticed. "Miss Jones, there's something for it right away. He turned to go. "Oh, Miss Jones, that primrose—and your ankle make out." he ventured, and closed the door.

In his room Hans warmed a can of beans and a slice of salt pork over the gas. And ate ambrosia. Lit his pipe and dreamed of a primrose path. Then of lovely flowers and fussed with curtains all day.

Hans lined primroses and flowers, too. Four years in the city printing plants had him searching for Title Jersey print shops. Lester after letter found their way to Hans' desk in many offices. Always the same answer no help wanted. Then Hans Brunn had a final reverie. It was Miss Jones.

"Miss Jones, Sidney," she said. "It made an admirable stretcher. Thank you so much." Hans interrupted hesitantly: "My ankle's a lot better now, Mr. Brunn," and was cut down like ball.

"Hey, wait—" Hans dashed over the door sill, tangled his feet, and fell the floor collide with his face. "Miss Jones, Miss Jones," he said found his head in Miss Jones' lap. "I wanted to tell you that I was entranced by her eyes. "If you could leave Miss Jones, I'd be interested enough to go to the movies with me. I'm interested."

"Primula Vulgaris, you old primrose" she disagreed.

The Primula Vulgaris, or primrose, thrived. So did Hans. He bought Miss Jones a Title Jersey. Are He that, Miss Jones learned to make apple strudel. She ate it religiously.

And just when cupid began to oil up his bowstring, Hans got a letter from home. Mr. Nahib, publisher, needed Hans. Hans returned to Title as assistant editor to his newspaper. Stairs are no hindrance when you have a lift. Hans went up them like a runaway car on a roller coaster.

Once, what Helen — Miss Jones' brother he reared, bursting into the drawing room got it.

Miss Jones let a perfectly rinsed dish fall. "Hans, you're back in the city?" Somehow she didn't feel much like dancing around in circles but Hans was running the show.

"Leave it and be glad of the chance," he ordered. "In two more days Hans Brunn will be back in the sunny meadows of Jersey Home, Sweet Home!"

Miss Jones was very well. He blamed it on his exciting happiness. But you and I know that it was Hans' strudel. That wouldn't account for the empty feeling near his heart. Miss Jones blamed herself. so he sought explanation from Helen's brother.

"I got wondering how the primrose is getting along." he said lamely.

"Primula Vulgaris," she corrected the young man.

"Not so good, tat Needa more sunshine. I'll bet you a million it's gonna miss that darn flower when I go. I'll miss those curtains, too. Edward Ward's mustard score is a of almost swuphanic calibre, and the lighting effects are terrific. I'll miss mine," he said, through her hair.

"But not now. You're gonna marry me. Say you will, saying, say—" Say yes, Hans yes."

"I'll take you back to the stores with me. We'll start another little Primrose Together, eh?" she said, "Primula Vulgaris," she tried to say, but his lips covered her mouth.

Weddings

PATRICK—BUSH

On Friday evening, a very popular young couple of Frankford, were quietly united in marriage by Rev. J. D. Knox, 86 Dunbar Street, of this city. The groom was Everett Theodore Patrick, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Patrick and the bride was Miss Doris Eleanor Bush, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Bush. They were attended by Don Patrick, brother of the groom and Miss Anetie Glyne. Mr. and Mrs. Patrick will reside in Frankford.

PLUNKETT—GABOURIE

Tweed, Aug. 27.—A pretty wedding took place at St. Carthage's Church, Tweed, on Thursday morning, August 26th, when Miss Reta Gabourie, Reg.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Gabourie of Tweed, was united in marriage to Edgar Plunkett, an officer of the Signals Training Centre, Camp Borden, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Plunkett, Stanleyville, Ont. The ceremony was performed by Canon Fry, S. B. Plunkett, manager of the Canadian Forward, Kingston, and a relative of the groom. Assisting in the sanctuary were the Very Rev. Dean D. Cushman, Rev. Fr. O'Donnell, and Rev. Fr. Walter Whalen, Parish Priest, Campbellford.

The sanctuary of the church was beautifully decorated with gladioli, stocks, and other summer flowers. The bride was becomingly gowned in white moire taffeta over satin and wore white shoes, hat and accessories, carrying a bouquet of pink roses. Miss Reta Gourlay, also Reg. N., of Cobourg, as bridesmaid, was dressed in blue sheer over taffeta, with pink accessories and carried roses.

Mr. J. Streeter of Camp Borden, was groomsman. The groom and his attendant were the uniforms of the military service to which they are affiliated, Mr. Stanley Gabourie, brother of the bride, was usher. While soulpres, were James Gaboucie, brother of the bride and John Plunkett, brother of the groom.

During the ceremony Mrs. F. LeSage, and Miss Gertrude Casey rendered a duet, and Mrs. F. Follett also sang.

Following the wedding, a reception was held and wedding breakfast served at the home of the bride. The groom's gift to the bride was a chest of silver, and to the bridesmaid, a cosfpact.

The young couple left for a honeymoon to the Maritime provinces, the bride choosing as her travelling costume, British crepe with floral accessories. On their return, they will reside in Montreal.

Urge a Child To Punish Himself

Benefited More if He Sets Penalties For Own Bad Behavior

By LISA GRENELLE

Benny had lost his temper with his small sister, Flora. He had hit her with a spoon before Flora's screams brought Nurse to interfere.

Nurse was savagely sarcastic on Benny's behavior. "Aren't you ashamed? Imagine a big boy like you hitting a little girl! Only a bully and a coward would do such a thing. You go right to your father, and he'll tell you a few things. He'll give you something you won't forget, I daresay."

So Benny went to Father, a little scared but very angry.

"I'll fix Flora. Didn't Nurse tell you? She says I'm a coward and a bully."

"But what do you think you are?" —

Benny flushed. "She busted my track. Flora did."

"Nothing. I'm going to let you punish yourself if you consider you deserve it."

"I don't have to be punished if I don't want to be?"

"If you are sure you don't deserve it. You're the judge."

"Oh, all right, then. I'll give her my truck. She busted it, anyway."

Wiser Course

"Then it isn't—"

"I like it better than anything even busted. And I won't have another until Christmas, anyhow." And Benny fled sobbing from the room, having inflicted upon himself a really terrible punishment.

If Father had taken it up where Nurse left off, Benny, punished or unpunished, would have gone away resentful, defiant, even a bit of a martyr. He would have learned nothing.

To be called a coward or bully by someone else only arouses a child's antagonism, but to force a child to consider himself a coward and a bully teaches him something that he doesn't forget.

Fashion Flashes

(By ALICE ALDEN)

A dash of Scotch is obvious in the success of plaids for suits and coats as well as for the new tailored frocks. A nice country suit for early autumn wear is of yellow, black and red plaid, in a smooth woolen. The skirt has umbrella-tuck-plaits. The jacket is fitted with a yellow blouse, and a yellow hat with red quills.

Pirats in millinery include a charming red-and-white model, velvet. It is really an aureole, for it is crownless, the brim being simply a long, velvet, doubled veil. The mesh forms a net over the hair.

Old world charm and modern sophistry combine in an evening dress of black taffeta. It has a heart-shaped decolletage, edged with narrow pink satin bands, and dispenses with shoulder straps.

"Just like they're going wild about those grand, reconditioned cars at TRUDEAU'S Garage. Say, THERE are cars to rave about! Every one's cleaned and in perfect condition. And TRUDEAU'S have every model!"

GOOD MANNERS

Wording the Announcement

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I intend to be married this fall. I will have a very small number at the church wedding. I would like to send out some announcements to my close friends, but I am not sure how they should read.

My father died when I was very young. My mother and I went to live with her parents. We lived with them until five years ago when mother remarried. However, I continued to call my home with my grandparents.

Under these circumstances, should my grandparents (both whom are living) announce my marriage? Or should my mother announce it? In either case, my name will be different. Just how should the announcement read?

G.

Since your mother is living, she should, even under the circumstances, as you set forth in your question, send the announcements. You do not say what your attitude is toward your stepfather, but I hope that you and he are friendly enough so that you will not only send the announcements in both his and your mother's name, but will word the announcements like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wells Smith announce the marriage of their daughter

Miss Mary Gray Brown

to

Mr. James Alan Graham

on Tuesday, the first of September Nineteen hundred and thirty-seven Des Moines, Iowa.

You may, if you wish, expand the second line of the announcement to read:

have the honour of announcing the marriage of their daughter

Or, if you object (and I hope you won't) to saying "their daughter," you may substitute "marriage of Mrs. Smith's daughter". The latter is not such good form as the former.

Mother's Apparel

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My mother is to celebrate her twenty-fifth wedding anniversary next month. I would like to know if a gray dress and silver accessories would be the proper role for a woman fifty-two years of age to wear? The daughters would like to wear light blue with silver accessories. Please give me your opinion.

Daughter.

It isn't the age of a woman that determines whether or not gray is "proper" for her; it's her type and especially her coloring. To my mind, thinking gray is one of the most difficult colors to wear, and it is for the person who wears it should have vibrant color in her cheeks and eyes. Otherwise gray is apt to look "dead". Don't select gray for your mother simply to have the silver-and-gray color-scheme appropriate for the Silver anniversary. If some shade of the afore becoming, don't limit yourself to gray. Consider light beige, a pinkish beige that glows, or a lovely soft blue, or rich burgundy.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on Good Manners submitted by readers.)

HOW TO LOSE A HUSBAND

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Today is the anniversary of my mother's death. One year ago today I just managed to get to my self home in time for her funeral. I had not seen my mother for several years.

I hate to be like Father Adam, casting blame on the woman, but my wife's absurd and almost pathological jealousy of my mother made me give in to her pronouncements for peace's sake. My mother had done everything for me, even refusing to marry a very good man because I disliked the idea of a stepfather.

She drudged out her life to the end and was found dead one morning, after a prolonged illness, by a kind neighbour, who had been running errands for her failing health. This neighbor, a widower, married a sister only in time for the burial. I shall write you more about this. Why do some wives do everything in their power to alienate a husband from good mothers?

Surely, the love a man has for his wife and his mother are as far apart as the Poles.

Why do some wives do everything in their power to alienate sons from good mothers? Because the sons are too weak-minded and afraid of their wives to call a halt to these possessive women. The best cure for such unreasonable jealousy is for a woman to visualize her own life when her sons marry.

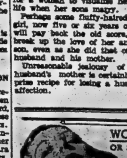
Perhaps some fairly-hatred little man five or six years of age will pay back the debt. Just stand and break up the love of her and her son, even as she did that of husband and his mother.

Unreasonable jealousy of your husband's mother is certainly the prime recipe for losing a husband's affection.

She Questions Their Difference in Ages

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We consider ourselves engaged, but we have been married for a little four or four and a half years. I'm sure you'll think me a fool, but I think more of him than of any person with whom I've ever associated. Frankly, I do not know what love is.



We have so much in common. We like the same sports, shows, theatres attitude toward family, and life in general. We never disagree for me. He tells me he loves me for that, and I'm glad he has ever known. He has asked me to marry him, but deep down in my heart I feel that he had a little doubt. I can't explain why. He admitted he wasn't absolutely sure, to the saturation point, about his "love attitude". But he thought he was.

He is 30 and I am 26. He is a fine, clean man and is highly rated in my profession. Our friendship will always been on the highest plane.

D. A. N.

There are several things to be considered in this friendship with the student. You are years younger than you. Since you both harbor the doubt, whether you really love each other "to the satisfaction point", might it not be only a perfect friendship with a romantic background? Again, there is still time element. You say you will not be able to be married for four or four and a half years. By that time he will be under 30, and the young man 35.

While this difference in ages is not an insuperable barrier to love, tastes have a way of changing in that time. You may decide not to marry, the boy may seem immature to you, and his interests may then be directed toward 18 or 19, rather than near 30. It is certainly a case for prayerful consideration.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE BELLE

Jean Harlow in "Saratoga"

Laughs and tears, thrills and romance, mingle in "Saratoga", co-starring Jean Harlow and Clark Gable, at the Belle theatre today, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, matinee daily.

A vivid story of the race-track, with pardonable intrigue, a great race, unusual characters, in which a delicate romance is woven, the play is an ideal one for these particular stars. They both can fight, and love through an action packed drama in which much whimsical comedy leavens the heavier moments.

Directed by Anita Loos and Robert Hopkins, who wrote "Ben Franklin of Old", it deftly directed by Jack Conway. Never was Miss Harlow lovelier than as the spoiled daughter of the millionaire. Clark Gable provides a virile partner for the actress and is compelling in his role.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer introduces a new comedy team in Frank Morgan and Una Merkel in the picture and they are responsible for some of the best comedy and song. Others in the cast are Lionel Barrymore, Walter Pidgeon, Cecilia Parker, Stanley Morner, Hattie McDaniels, Frankie Darro and Henry Stone.

The race, particularly, is thrilling as the great race climax, is brilliant. Edward Ward's musical score is of almost symphonic calibre, and the lighting effects are terrific. Whatever America are grippingly interesting.

Splendid Featurettes

A splendid array of featurettes have been assembled for exhibition on the same program including the Belle Latest World News Event, Robert Benchley America's Ace wit in a funny and original comedy, "Romance of Indigestion," and "Picturesque South Africa," beautiful and interesting Travel-talk in color complete a splendid trio program of screen entertainment.

Performances start daily at 2.30 and 7.10. "Saratoga" begins daily at 3.05, 7.45 and 9.55 p.m.

Movie Secrets Revealed

The millions of movie fans who have watched Claudette Colbert at screen test is like will soon have the curtain raised on their Universal's "Hollywood Screen Test" is presented at the Capitol theatre next Thursday and Friday as a special added attraction, featuring the new movie find, Catharine Hughes.

In the picture Catharine goes to Hollywood for her screen test. The camera follows her through the fantastical from the air. The camera follows her through the studios, picking up scores of interesting, rarely serious inside details that fascinate the film fan.

Catharine enters the make-up department, where beauty secrets of the make-up specialist are revealed. Then comes her voice test, which proves that the lovely girl will well as Catharine, to see exactly how she looks and sounds on the screen.

The sequence features Catharine singing "I Feel That Foolish Feeling." It reveals how the singing is later synchronized with the action which is filmed separately. Various angles and scenes are unfolded to Catharine as she goes through her test.

Then the lucky discovered Hollywood aspirant, after careful rehearsal plays several scenes in front of the camera. The film is printed, developed, and edited, each detail being revealed in swiftly clicked, interesting and informative technical scenes. Finally, Catharine and the theatre audience view the finished test, and Catharine Hughes gets Hollywood's O.K. and a contract.

Claudette Colbert and Ray Mill and in "The Gilded Lady" at the Capitol commencing Sunday midni ght at 12.00. Claudette Beech in the western thriller "Hit the Saddle" at the Capitol Saturday only.

Mulligan Does His Duty

By FRANK EVANS
eClare Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service

"Tim, old timer, what's the matter? You haven't been acting like yourself for weeks. Sick?"

Captain Tim Mulligan continued to shine the badge on the front of his jacket. He shook his head.

"Spring fever, mebbe, lieutenant. Besides, I'm getting old."

The man in uniform lit a cigar, about the police station looked up and laughed. Captain Murphy, at the desk, shook his head.

"You old Tim? Never! Just as young as the day you joined the force—21 years ago . . . a bride-groom at 50, eh?"

"S' Molly 'n me didn't take a honeymoon for 'nother year . . . when the little tad was just a year old."

He sat down heavily and refused a proffered tin of tobacco. At last he spoke. "I'm going to leave, Lieutenant Murphy called to him:

"Better say a month, Tim. We can't afford to lose Tim Mulligan after 21 years on the force. Don't think about Molly too, and the little tad."

Tim Mulligan smiled and swung his right club paunchily.

"Just the same, I'm worryin' about me. Faith and I'm younger than all the rest of you. Right."

Murphy laid down his pen and strolled over to a group of officers.

"I say, fellows, have you noticed anything wrong with Mulligan?"

"Not a thing," they chorused.

"We noticed it—but he won't talk about it. He's all right. I met Molly in the grocery store yesterday and she looked real fit and full o' cryin'. But when I told her she looked younger than she did 20 years ago, she said I'd been kissin' the blarney stone. A fine woman, Molly Mulligan."

"What's the kid doing now?" Lieutenant Murphy had been over and like his show. "Hope he makes them proud of him. They sacrificed a lot to give him an education. There's one thing that boy must have was learnin'! He certainly was proud of those report cards . . ."

"I'm told he isn't at Yale and Molly would have him be," said Jones over his evening paper. "Don't take to sports . . . regular sheik and dance hound . . . and Tim wanted him to be a real man! But the kid is young, not twenty-five yet. He should turn out all right with folks like Tim Mulligan's son."

The night lengthened. One by one the men left headquarters. Two detectives drowned in an adjoining office, chatin' idly. Lieutenant Murphy, the wall. Outside, Cohen, the driver, whistled softly as he sprawled on the front seat of the patrol wagon. Then came the harsh rasp of the bell and everyone was galvanized into action. Cohen came to his door and swore softly.

"Mulligan calling," announced Lieutenant Murphy swiftly. "Fairview Old station; Fairview and Edgemont . . . hold-up . . . one gun . . . get a move on, Cohen."

It was scarcely ten minutes before the terrified voice of the call announced the return of the patrol wagon. Cohen and Murphy themselves about the desk as the prisoner was brought in. Cohen on one side, Murphy on the other, strongly and white-faced, on the other.

He was scarcely more than a boy —the prisoner—dressed in clothes of the latest mode, a tweed cap pulled at a rakish angle over his ear, a cigarette between his firm, red lips. Lieutenant Murphy rose at the desk.

"Take off that hat!" snapped Tim Mulligan. The young man looked up, sullenly and sheepishly.

"Say, you eavesdropper," said Mulligan shortly. "I was patrolling Fairview when the machine ran into the old station. I heard the attendant call out once, as this one's with a jerk of his thumb towards the prisoner, "got out. They were there last week, y' know. He pulled his gun through the leg . . . hospital." He spoke to the prisoner. "Tell me I'm a liar."

The prisoner turned . . . he faced him to draw. He . . . he——" Tim Mulligan's hands heavily against the desk, his hands fumbling at the buttons of his coat.

The officer Tim Mulligan continued to shine the badge on the front of his coat with big red hands. "Spring fever, mebbe, lieutenant. Besides, I'm getting old."

The man in uniform lit a cigar, about the police station looked up and laughed. Captain Murphy, at the desk, shook his head.

But the kid is young, not twenty-five yet. He should turn out all right with folks like Tim Mulligan's son."

The night lengthened. One by one the men left headquarters. Two detectives drowned in an adjoining office, chatin' idly. Lieutenant Murphy, the wall. Outside, Cohen, the driver, whistled softly as he sprawled on the front seat of the patrol wagon. Then came the harsh rasp of the bell and everyone was galvanized into action. Cohen came to his door and swore softly.

"Mulligan calling," announced Lieutenant Murphy swiftly. "Fairview Old station; Fairview and Edgemont . . . hold-up . . . one gun . . . get a move on, Cohen."

It was scarcely ten minutes before the terrified voice of the call announced the return of the patrol wagon. Cohen and Murphy themselves about the desk as the prisoner was brought in. Cohen on one side, Murphy on the other, strongly and white-faced, on the other.

He was scarcely more than a boy —the prisoner—dressed in clothes of the latest mode, a tweed cap pulled at a rakish angle over his ear, a cigarette between his firm, red lips. Lieutenant Murphy rose at the desk.

"Take off that hat!" snapped Tim Mulligan. The young man looked up, sullenly and sheepishly.

"Say, you eavesdropper," said Mulligan

HOMERS HIT BY DICKEY BATEMAN

Point Anne Defeat Gananoque in Second Round by 5-1

A belated eighth inning relief effort by Carl Yeo "Canadian" ace, in a victory over Gananoque nine in the first game of the second round of Intermediate O.A.B.A. play, saved the locals last evening. The two squads battled in practical even fashion for over seven frames, until the Shoredore-ites spurt broke out in the final half of the eighth to secure victory. The return game will be played at Gananoque this evening.

Lorne Bateman was the hero of the locals for the second time within the elongated Springbrook ball park, out eleven Gananoque batsmen struck out eleven, Gananoque twirler, Ted Randall, the Canadian mounddenan only whiffed two, Bateman's splendid defensive ball was however, as the hits were evenly divided at six each, but the Point Anne lingle came, when his mates runs.

Dickey scored the hoosier's initial run with a circuit blow in the fifth, Gananoque, not entirely daunted, the scoring column until their first at the end and then by the hands of his by Thompkins and Bateman. The "Ornamentals" put their game on the line in the last of the eighth, when Sero was safe on an error by Randall, and Lorne Bateman saw subsequently hit, while Hopper was safe on a fielder's choice and Yeo all set out to make the final count 5-1 for Point Anne. Bateman scored his own victory with an eighth inning homer.

The game was featured by splendid fielding while Bateman had a decided fielding edge on his opponent, Nutstall.

The line-ups:

Point Anne—Genereaux 1b; Dingay rf; Whitehead 2b; Gaunt, ss; Bateman c; Yeo p; Hopper cf; Sero lf; Bateman p and Scott cf.

Gananoque—Bateman ss; Nolan 1f; Thompkins 3b; K. Orser w; Orser cf; Shurtliff 2b; Toby 1b; Randall p; Nutstall c.

Score by innings:

Gananoque ..... 000 000 001—1 6 2
Pt. Anne ..... 000 010 04x—5 6 4

Umpires—Baker and Randall.

PLAYGROUNDS CLOSED WITH AWARDING OF CRESTS AND PENNANTS

Climaxing a gala and successful season of playground activities the curtain was rung down on those enjoyable activities when prizes and pennants were awarded the victors and champions of the Belleville playgrounds for 1937 at a massed marching held at the Belleville grounds last evening. With hundreds of teachers, parents and friends of the children families of the kiddies to attend the event Belleville playgrounds during the past summer, were present at the official closing of the season.

Rev. L. S. Wight, representing the Rotary Club of Belleville, had in hand to present the pennants to the respective group leaders. The Belleville teams winning at baseball, ping pong and track and field events. Each Belleville athletes triumphed in the art of three-shoe pitching at horse shoes. The individual trophies were presented to the respective champions by Frederick Hodge Logan of the Belleville Kiwanis Club, sponsors of the playgrounds, Kiwanis throughout senior boys' championship was won by Bert Hamilton, girls', Nancy Tufts; junior boys', Jim Pigden; junior girls', Winnie Taylor, and midget, Jake Cowan.

During the afternoon session interesting track championships of the Belleville playgrounds was won by Bert Hamilton, with after five tourrid struggles, one in each category.

Belleville parks' programme last night various children, who by daily attendance at the two Belleville playgrounds, provided a splendid programme for the entertainment of their large gallery of patrons. Some fine dancing numbers were given by Louise Patrick and Bretta. While giving splendid performances were also rendered and were presented by Marie Brent with others assisting.

Many of the veteran playground supervisors thanked the Kiwanis Club and Rotary Club of Belleville for their assistance and lauded the children of Belleville for their cooperation during the playground season. Supervisor George Laughlin and assistant-supervisors Jean Catcher, Lorraine McGinnis, W. Bowerman, Jean Thompson officiated all present in person to officially close the Belleville playground season for 1937.

"I'm told he isn't at Yale and Molly would have him be," said Jones over his evening paper. "Don't take to sports . . . regular sheik and dance hound . . . and Tim wanted him to be a real man! But the kid is young, not twenty-five yet. He should turn out all right with folks like Tim Mulligan's son."

Actually, however, he said, there was nothing any Prime Minister could do to prevent the Senate blocking the organization of their choice. Mr. Hepburn himself was beginning to see the C.I.O. issue was not working and was seeking an excuse to get out of the strike. He was asking a mandate from the people for the illegal acts committed by the province. Collection of this money was a mere routine matter for governments.

It was the simple duty of any government to collect taxes and to maintain law and order. No government could precede a special mandate for either function. The real reason for the election was an impending power shortage due to the repudiation of the former Quebec power contracts.

Dare Not Delay Election Claim

Premier Hepburn dare not delay the election until the shortage became apparent and he was forced to renew these contracts and build expensive power plants.

Within a few years Ontario would have to pay $36 per horse power for power. It was obtaining under the old contracts at $18. Already the government had spent more than $15,000,000 on the Queenston development and $40,000,000 more had been earmarked for developments in the next few years to meet the demands for power.

Ontario should never have stooped so low as to repudiate solemn contracts, said Mr. Rowe, and must take a long time to repair the damage to the province's reputation in certain parts of the world by the repudiation.

The old Hydro organization had been practically disbanded by the Hepburn government. Municipalities, the real owners of Hydro, had had no say in management. It was controlled by a "common old-fashioned Grit committee." It returned to power to-day would restore municipal representation.

Frankhouse in Hall of Fame With No-Hitter Against Reds; Giants Split with Pirates

League-Leading Cubs Idle Because of Heavy Rain

CARDS LOSE TWO

Yankees Increased Lead With Gehrig in Title Role

By RED PEDDER

Like an accident going some place to happen, or a guy falling off his house, you never can tell what sport game will pick you up land on.

That's not taking any of the credit from curveballer Freddy Frankhouse for the nice no-hit game he pitched which he checked his hat in the hall of fame yesterday. But, strictly from the record, Freddy, who once played ball in Ottawa and who has kicked around the National League circuit for eleven seasons without causing any wholesale smashing of leads on the part of rival batters, would certainly not be one of the ten or eleven pitchers you'd name as most likely to turn the trick. And particularly since he's working for the Reds when he gave.

Yet, there it is in the record books today: 33-year-old Fred Frankhouse, with a record of 102 victories and 117 losses in his career for the Cards, Reds and Brooklyns since 1927, receives credit for the 9th no-hit game in team-in-diamond history. He walked six, and it, seventh man drew a life on an error as he fanned the side and Cincinnati Reds yesterday by a 5-0 margin in the second game of a twin-bill, the game at that point.

Cubs Are Idle.

With the league-leading Cubs idle in Boston because of rain, the second-place Giants had a neat chance to close some of that two-game gap in their second split with the favorable sloopas, Pittsburgh Pirates. But the best Bill Terry's Yanders could to was split even. Butch Brandt and Hans Brown teamed up on a four-hitter to take the opener 1-0, after which Lefty Al Smith surprised everyone—including himself and Terry—with a five-hitter for a 3-2 Giant win in the nightcap.

The Phillies pinned a double defeat on the Cardinals, 4-1 and 6-3, to climb into sixth place.

The Yankees increased their American league lead to 7½ games with a 4-3 win over the Browns, largely through the batting of Lou Gehrig. The second-place Tigers, meantime, were mauled 8-5 by the Red Sox, the latter getting the six-run ninth homer in seven days.

Pete Appleton's three-hitter gave the Senators a 5-0 shutout over the White Sox. The Indians, as usual, trimmed the Athletics 9-3.

TERRIERS WIN OVER BRAMPTON

Other Semi-Final Winners Were St. Catharines and Mimico

St. Catharines, Orillia and Mimico hold one-game leads today in the playoff series for semi-final berths in the Ontario Amateur Lacrosse Association after the Garden City, Whitby and the three best-of-three series will go to the limit of five games after Saturday's games.

The Saints trimmed Toronto Marlboros 21-13 in a clean, fast game at the Garden City. The Dukes were outplayed by a wide margin in the first half and were unable to fight through St. Catharines' back line to any extent in the second half of the game.

Marlboros outscored St. Catharines 6-5 in the third period but that was the only time they showed superiority. Glen Madden topped the St. Catharines players, handing out seven goals from his defence position while Bill Isaacs looked good for the Dukes.

Orillia's Dominion champion Terriers battled Brampton Excelsiors right up until the final ten minutes of the game when Checkers' defence fell to pieces and Orillia ran away with the tilt, 13-4.

WALL STREET CLOSE

New York, Aug. 28.—While the stock market's appetite was far from voracious today's brief session's leading issues nibbled at a rally. A number of the long brow-beaten rails came to the fore and encouraged odet buying in some steels, oils, coppers and specialties.

Dealings were exceptionally apathetic throughout. There was an assortment of losers at the finish. Transfers were around 300,000 shares.

Among Canadian shares there were minor changes both ways. International Nickel and Distillers Seagram showed fractional gains while Canadian Pacific and Hiram Walker lost around ½. Canada dropped ¾ while Dominion funds added 1-64 of a cent at 100.01 9-16.

Up fractions to a point or more at the best were Santa Fe, N.Y. Central, Southern Pac., Pacific, Baltimore and Ohio, Pennsylvania, Southern Railway, U.S. Steel, Bethlehem, American Steel Foundries and Sears Roebuck.

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE

(Close)

Toronto, Aug. 28 (CP)—Prices were trimmed moderately in the final session of the week with volume continuing on the light side.

The interlining leaders, Ford A. CLP.R., Distillers and Walkers Common posted losses of 1-8 to 3-8. Canadian Industrial Alcohol A was in demand at a half point advance.

Banks, investments and building shares were steady to strong. Brantford Coverage added a fraction and Canada Bread a point and a half point up. Charters were of minor importance in the golds and base steels and a loss of 3 points for Abitibi Pfd. was the main change in the paper group.

Final prices found Smelters and Nickel on the up side. Siscoe turned heavy, selling down to 2.55 for a loss of 13 cents.

Braloorne dropped 40 cents in broken lots inside and the close was down 5 to 18 cents for Pickle Crow, O'Brien, Coniaurum, Central Patricia, Preston and Tweagmac Read-Authier gained 15 cents and Sylvanite 10 cents.

Board Room Gossip

As supplied to Biggar and Crawford by Financial Service.

Little Long Lac Fully Owned

Control Valued at $17,000,000.

Production for the month of July at Little Long Lac Gold Mines, Little Long Lac area, amounted to $127,000 from treatment of 8,540 tons of ore, average recovery being $14.94 per ton. This compares with $140,720 in June from treatment of 9,406 tons, when average recovery was $14.74.

Total production for the first seven months of the year amounted to $856,056 from treatment of 59,755 tons, for average recovery of $14.32.

During the last couple of months production has been slightly below regular monthly average, due to the fact that a large percentage of material is being taken from close-up of upper level stopes, into which some wall rock is sloughing.

It is estimated that another month and a half will see a return to normal milfeed, which on the lower levels is drawn—from cut-and-fill stoping.

In the last few days a new vein has uncovered on the western end of the property, believed to be the origin of the float discovered in the early days of the mine. Grab samples from the vein ran .4 oz. per ton. Meanwhile, active development work is proceeding on the zinnin and zenith veins. This work is now progressing toward new zones, particularly to the north of the main body.

Practically all earnings reports of recent weeks have shown improvement over last year and so long as this continues, investors need have little fear about the market, as stocks have always followed improved earnings. Not only are earnings improving, but increased dividend disbursements are a feature of the day.

No one can predict the immediate developments in China, but the market should be able to overcome such obstacles as it has met in the past. Uncertainty is dissipated. Good buying has been noted in the case of the better grade stocks, thus placing these securities in sound technical position to follow the existing and-distribution of the metal and that natural forces will exert pressure that will result in a higher level of prices is such sooner than most of us expect."

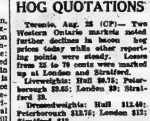
Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Aug. 28—Local produce markets yesterday ruled steady to firmer. Butter and cheese were fractionally stronger while eggs, potatoes and poultry were unchanged. Receipts were 187 cases of eggs, 62 boxes of butter and 4,364 boxes of cheese, excluding factirals.

Sales at the Canadian Commodity Exchange were 409 boxes of Quebec fresh 92 score butter at 27c, and 100 boxes of Quebec seconds, 91 score, at 26 1-4c. Cheese prices for Quebec fresh, 92 score butter were at 7-8c to 27 1-4c.

The cheese market was 14 1-4c for No. 1 Ontario make and 13 7-8 to 14c for No. 1 Quebec.



On the egg market graded shipments in the cases were 25-28 1-2c for A-large, 25-26 1-2 for A-medium, 23-24 1-2c for B and 20c for C. Offerings at the Commodity Exchange were at 28c, 26c, 23 1-2c and 20c respectively.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Aug. 28 (CP)— Two Western Ontario markets noted further declines in bacon hog prices today while other reporting points were steady. Prices were 25 to 70 cents were marked up at London and Strafford.

Liveweights: Hull $9.75; Peterboro $9.65; London $9; Stratford $8.

Dressedweight: Hull $12.40; Peterboro $13.75; London $13; Stratford $12.

A total of 2,918 boxes of cheese, all white, were offered for sale on today's local Cheese Board, of which 1,000 boxes sold 13¾c and the remainder being sold at 13-16 cents. All sold.

WRESTLERS SHOW WARES AT FAIR

Another endeavour on the part of the directors of the Belleville Fair to please their patrons is seen in the fact that the entertainment Committee has completed arrangements with the Midway Athletic Club of Toronto, to bring its stable of amateur wrestlers to the exhibition next week.

Cognizant of the fact, that this popular sport has undergone a distinct revival in the city during the past few weeks, directors of the Fair will give the increasing number of followers of this phase of athletics the opportunity to view their favorite pastime in front of the grandstand at the Exhibition on Wednesday and Friday evenings of next week. The wrestling performances will follow the vaud-ville entertainment and will start approximately at 9.30-fifteen.

The athletes taking part, in this particular sphere are strangers to the sports fandom of the fair and district. Red Garner, international lightweight champion and popular athlete with Belleville fans will give a brilliant demonstration against Serl Crowthall of Toronto, reputed "badgman" in wrestling circles. An excited crowd of fans saw these wrestlers engage in a bitter struggle in the Maple Leaf Arena a few weeks ago. Their meeting at the fair grounds will be of a grudge nature and should be productive of some of the finest wrestling seen in these parts.

Ted Fielding, the "Lion of the North" one of the best drawing cards seen hereabouts in some time will again demonstrate his Tarzan-like athleticism against Cleve Hambly clever scientific matman, who defeated the "Lion of the north" last night at the Arena. These wrestlers are the last word in their particular phase of sport and their meeting at the Fair Grounds will be one of special interest to fans as Fielding will be out to avenge the defeat of last night.

If the initial night's performance meets with the approval of Fair patrons, exhibitions will be held Thursday and Saturday as well as the two nights mentioned before.

JAPANESE BOMB

ling projectiles were burned to death. Chinese authorities said the airmen had no particular target but were only trying "to terrify and intimidate helpless citizens."

Each of the four bombing squadrons was followed by protecting pursuit ships. Time and again they droned down out of the clouds to drop their cargoes earthward.

Some of the explosives killed and wounded many laborers who were building a railway. The rail came at the busiest hour of the day.

Was R. R. Station Target?

It was possible the airmen were trying to destroy the south station of the Shanghai-Hangchow Railroad and the Shanghai Municipal Administrative Buildings but if so their aim was bad.

Shrieking Chinese moved in giant waves toward any haven of safety. Only to flee in wild panic at the all clear.

When they clamored at the gates of the French concession, to the north and west, they were turned away. The foreign concession already was overflowing with Chinese refugees from the war-torn areas of Shanghai.

Barred from the French concession, the throngs fled toward the Whangpoo River to the east. In other districts some of the fear-crazed men, women and children threw themselves through barbed wire entanglements.

100 Wounded Children Admitted.

The British hospital report of Tuesday's bombardment was presented by the secretary of the Municipal Council. Hospital aides admitted 100 of the wounded little ones.

Flames shot into the sky the moment the first of the initial cargo of explosives was loaded. They spread rapidly through the closely-built frame structures of Nantao and were visible for miles.

Fears of the raid, in retaliation for China's bombardment of Hongkew, had caused a wild evacuation of non-combatant Chinese.

Meanwhile, both sides were preparing for action in a new theatre of warfare, ranging from 30 to 40 miles inland from Shanghai.

reduced in all departments of government and revenues had been increased without resort to the burden of primary producers. The President of the Council of Association, Organization, United States labor leader was telling all time waiting for a favorable opportunity to resume, if possible, a program of disruption of Ontario industry.

"If you want to put that opportunity in their hands, vote for Mr. Rowe (Hon. Earl Rowe, Conservative leader) and his friends," he said. "If you want it forestalled, support the present government because we have repeatedly pledged ourselves to keep Lewis and his gang out of our province and we mean to keep our word."

The Premier said he was "fed up" with men who refused to work and intended to deal with "these parasites who are feeding out of the pockets of you taxpayers."

TEXT OF PROTEST

that the planes concerned were not Japanese, second that the trouble was from a stray bullet, and third that Sir Hughe had no right to travel across China without warning the Japanese.

The Morning Post's diplomatic correspondent said "the British government has decided not only to send a protest to Tokyo but to demand indemnity on behalf of Sir Hughe." The writer added it was expected the text of the protest would be published today.

London Times Outspoken

The Times declared "the most monstrous of all explanations from the Japanese is that the machine-gun bullets which pierced the British ambassador's car were fired by the ambassador's improdence . . . . . This," The Times added, "is not a mischievous but merely a senseless fabrication."

"When the Japanese say their army had news that Chiang Kai-Shek (the Chinese premier and war lord) was to travel along the Nanking-Shanghai road that day," The Times went on, "they in effect were saying 'we did not plot to shoot the British ambassador we plotted to murder the head of a neighboring state, with which we are in diplomatic relations, and to make sure that we were to get him we gave orders that every car passing along the road should be machine-gunned or bombed."

Disregard of Law Pointed out

The Daily Express said Doods had been instructed to point out a simple point about the intended murder of Chiang Kai-Shek which "is admitted disregard for international law, and that it is impossible to carry on international diplomatic business if an attitude of carelessness for the relations between one nation and another is persisted in.

Meanwhile from Tokyo Reuters News Agency reported the Japanese news agency had not published the British categorial denial that Admiral Sir Charles Little had suggested the British ambassador had been imprudent.

MISSING GIRL

By Maryse Rutledge

Lorna clenched, unclenched her hands. "Are—you—telling—Tony?" "I don't know!" Bertram shook his head in sickness and confusion. "If you do, you'll be sorry. I swear I'll get you for it." Lorna's lip hatred she had felt from the beginning for his white and gold and stocked in Lorna's throat. This could mean the loss of Tony's Kayestone—the Kaye wedding jewels. Are you going to let her take the blame? cost us? Paula. "I won't be so good for you, either."

With a fatal shrug of his shoulder, he admitted, "I can do nothing now that you have acted this way," and suddenly he added in clipped French, "Et pis l'on si sace—sans—aimer." Enough and enough. The Latin gong of satiation, sealed by his bored sigh.

Lorna, sprang at him, seizing his hand, surveying forgotten but her mad passion for this man who had taught her so much for. "Henri," she cried, "Henri! What do you mean? You can't mean it!"

Jane could not look at them. She waited for an outbreak from Lorna, but none came. Instead, Paula's slender fingers were gripping Lorna's wrist, seeming to command the narrow blond face so close to hers. The struggle was over, and Lorna sank, sobbing, behind Jane's chair, pressing the door shut.

"Paula, she is gone." La Paula went quickly toward Jane. She turned about him and stood down at the portfolio and its spilled drawings.

With a shudder of distaste, she said: "And I am going. I never should have stayed."

He stood silently in front of her, bending his head. "There are some things it is difficult to explain, Madame," he said gravely. "You will, to honor, forget, I hope, what you have seen and heard here today. It is for the best. I assure you, that my affairs have ever been managed so indiscreetly."

"It has put me in the murmured, "in a very serious position, which I can't explain, either. I don't know what I shall do."

Le Paule's look probed, and he spoke in a low, hurried manner. "I think, Madame, we have a little more to say to each other. If you will stay a moment longer."

Outside, on the street, Bertram Cedar impatiently waited for Lorna in the new Lancia he had bought that day at her frank suggestion that if he planned to run with Cedy crowd he must have his own car. Her party for that evening didn't seem to worry Lorna. "Phaleen's flying fits over the expense and mother's enjoying it," she told Bertram. "I don't have to stick around family scenes, if I'm back in time to dress." Now, she had asked Bertram to wait while she rushed up for a word with the Comte la Paule. "I'll only be a second," she promised. But it was nearly half an hour.

Bertram sulked behind the wheel in his latest weeds, occasionally slipping from a flask, which he confessed to be a left-over habit of prohibition days. He muttered to himself, glancing down at his hands. "Shaky. Been going it a bit too fast."

He was beginning to feel a little hurry when Lorna hurried out to the curb Cee, what ailed her! He sat up and whistled, his brown eyes gaily round in his florid, good-looking face. "Wonderful!" She scrambled back, missed up over something, her red hair fairly crackling, her eyes a queer green.

"Nothing," she answered him shortly. "I want a drink, though. Let's hurry."

Bertram passed the long machine to Fifth Avenue, not feeling so hot himself. How the devil had he managed to spend so much in a week? He thought dismally. Thirty in his wallet, and he had nearly when he left Paris. Lucky Dave to write his mother for more. What price Park Avenue!

Lorna's mouth curled thick, scarlet and sullen in her pale little face. "My C—, what shall I do? what shall I do?" sang along the dark wires of her nerves, so cold rays dried in her throat as she thought of la Paule's light blue eyes leaning her out, the final shrug of his shoulders as he closed the door on her. Done. Finished. Tired of her. All in a gesture. Dropped her when there might be trouble. And there was sure to be trouble with that girl gabbling like a millionaire.

"Whitliest" Bertram almost shot by in a red light.

"Drink." Lorna said again, but she looked more closely at the young man, narrowing her flash and foggy voice. She should be back in Toronto by night at the latest, with people coming at nine. Quarrier to stir by the gadget clock of the car. If ever in her life she had needed her wits, she needed them now. She never had quite believed that this girl Tony Kaye had picked up from nowhere, this Alice-in-Wonderland of his, would give him up so tamely just because she, Lorna Cleveland, wanted to be Mrs. Anthony Kaye. All too easy and pretty the Paris divorce idea. But if it didn't go through, "If" Lorna would be in one grand jam.

Bertram slid over to Park Avenue, and up to the Park Lane. "As good as say," he muttered. He was slow, on wedging himself, climbing out. His stocky figure wavered a little as he followed Lorna, who pushed ahead of him to a small table in a corner. Oh Fashionable. "Bring two more," she ordered, as the first were placed before them.

"Yours! Want us to float 'em Tuxedo?" Bertram cocked an eyebrow. "I could swim in an ocean of these with you, Baby. Cheers." A week of partying with Lorna had worked him as her impetuous lover, but had also removed any sense of respect or awe. Not so hotly-witty these Park Avenue gals on beggar view. They did it almost as well in Front St. Lac.

Lorna fitted a cigarette into her absurdly long jade holder, curving rings from her straight little nose. "Guess who was with Henri," she began. "And was she put out when I waltzed in, uninvited!"

Bertram made a grimace. He had quickly learned that this French-man, wasn't popular with the men of the crowd, particularly the husbands. But little could he guess that the key to la Paule's studio burned in Lorna handbag. "And whose home was he breaking up when you barged in? I'll bet."

Lorna watched him. "Alice-in-Wonderland Kaye was there," she said slowly, noting the involuntary tightening of his flashy hand on his glass. "A little girl without a past busy making cake," she went on. "Remember that afternoon, Bertie, when you crashed in on Kayestone? Funny, wasn't it, you imagining you recognized the famous mystery girl? You know"—her hand brushed his ever so lightly, and she smiled—"I've always suspected if—you didn't—I mean recognize her. A man like you moves around such a lot." Flattery sweet at any other time.

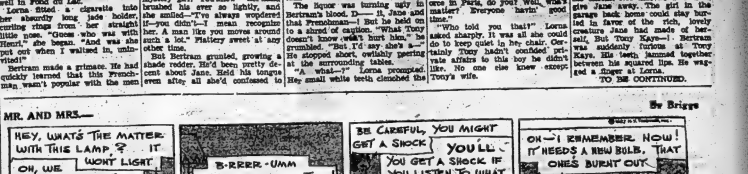
But Bertram grunted, growing a shade redder. He'd been pretty decent about Jane. Held his tongue even after, all she'd confessed to him. Her trick in putting one over on money Kaye was all right, and if she hadn't got him to marry her, that was her own business. But at bottom Bertram was rather solidly conventional. He didn't believe all of Jane's fairy tale. Somehow the idea of her with Le Paule stirred up muddy waters. He drank his second Old Fashioned.

"It isn't quite fair to Tony, is it?" Lorna remarked sweetly. She hadn't missed the expression of his face. He did know something. "Shall we have one more, and then we must go." She must have had a talk.

The liquor was burning ugly in Bertram's blood. D——— it, Jane and that Frenchman—! But he held on to a shred of caution. What Tony doesn't know won't hurt him," he grumbled. "But, I'd say she's a——" he stopped short, owlishly peering at the surrounding tables.

"Not—!" Lorna prompted. His small white teeth clenched the hide holder as she glanced down at her wrist watch. More than ever she felt convinced, as she had been walking back to Jane's, "If only she could find a weapon powerful enough to shut the girl's mouth!

Bertram wasn't quite so fuddled as she had hoped. He leaned forward, his thick, smoothly tailored shoulder muscles over his glass. "Never you mind," he said virtuously. The third Old Fashioned cocktail was having a swift and potent effect on Lorna. "I'll look after that. You look Tony away. Wan' him yourself. Think he's goin' to divorce la Paule, do you? What's the matter?"



"Who told you that?" Lorna asked sharply. It was all she could do to keep quiet in her chair. Certainly Tony hadn't confided private affairs to this boy he didn't like. No one else knew except Tony's wife.

Bertram blinked, with a fretful puckar to his lips. "She told me," thought of Jane and la Paule as an image Lorna had summoned to his hazy mind, the link he approved. "Go ahead and marry Tony. Why not?" And he nodded wisely. Lorna drew in her breath. When next she spoke, she sounded indifferent. "No! as easy as all that."

"No!" Bertram tipped his empty glass. Sorry he'd been in this group only a week, and he knew more than any of 'em. "Go on. Marry him," he repeated, his brow contracted against Tony for "high-hatting" him. Bertram felt the familiar glow of his cheeks. Not that he wanted to give Jane away. The girl in the case, of course, he could stay buried in favor of the rich, lovely creature Jane had kept at bay herself. But Tony Kaye—! Bertram felt suddenly furious at Tony Kaye. His teeth jammed together between his squared lips. He wagged a finger at Lorna.

OTTAWA PARADE

Back Stage in the Dominion Capital with

WILFRID EGGLESTON

They tell a delicious anecdote about, of all events, has the ring of truth, about Sir Edward Beatty and the new national secretary of the C.C.F., David Lewis of Ottawa.

Lewis is a Rhodes scholar. It came as a surprise to many of his fellows at Modern that he made application for the scholarship, because, although he was undoubtedly brilliant, he had not bothered to accumulate an impressive record at examinations. However, in due course his application went through and he was summoned for oral examination and the following dialogue is said to have ensued:

Sir Edward Beatty (one of the examiners): "Mr. Lewis, what is your qualification?"

Lewis: "To be the first socialist premier of Canada."

Sir Edward: "Aha. Now, Mr. Lewis, if you were to achieve your ambition, what is the first thing you would do?"

Lewis: "Nationalize the C.P.R."

Lewis went to Oxford. Whether Sir Edward felt that the best thing Canada could do with a man of such dangerous thoughts was to send him to that eminent seat of learning, the "home of lost causes", or whether he simply admired his sales' spirit, I don't know.

XXX XXX

Those who aspire to high places in politics these days cannot do better than go to university, and, perhaps, the chances are a little higher if one goes to Dalhousie. Lewis, or one of the other Maritime institutions. If the scribes are right the student across the water is even more so.

For instance, Professor John Hilton, at the Liberal Summer School at Cambridge a few weeks ago, drew attention to the fact that of the 21 ministers in the present British Cabinet, no less than 20 are "public school" men. Of these, 15 went to the most exclusive public schools (a Parliament public school being an endowed 'private' school usually with a staff fee). Of the 20, 17 went to a University, and 12 of these went either to Oxford or Cambridge.

In John Gunther's fascinating survey "Inside Europe" there are additional interesting lights on the connection between the best schools and universities and the top ranks in British political life.

His answer is brief. "Of the 21 ministers who have been in the cabinet since the war, 20 went to either Oxford or Cambridge. But a university career is not quite so important Thucidimidis as education in a great public school."

"Of the 21 members of the British cabinet and junior ministers, no fewer than 16 went to Eton, six to Harrow and seventeen to other public schools of recognized quality."

XXX XXX

Even in Canada, we are not quite so prejudiced about the sources of our cabinet ministers, though the chances of a college graduate are obviously greater than those of one who is not.

Of the sixteen members of the present Mackenzie King administration, thirteen are college graduates, one of the 13 (Mr. Howe) being an engineer (B. Sc.) trained in the famous Institute of Technology in Massachusetts.

The three who have no college education hold, however, major posts, Mr. Dunning being second in rank to the prime minister, and both Messrs. Euler and Crerar filling key positions.

Among them, the 16 members of the cabinet can boast a fine collection of scholastic records and degrees. . . . The Chief Whip, man is Norman Rogers.

The prime minister collected academic degrees at the University of Toronto, at Chicago and at Harvard; Dandurand, Legarè, Cardin, Power and Michaud are all Laval men; Hon. Mitchell F. Hepburn, elderly graduated from Dalhousie, Mackenzie from Edinburgh and Cardinal from Manitoba College. Rinfret went to St. Mary's College in Montreal. Neither Queen's nor McGill figure in the present cabinet, but both of them are well represented in the House of Commons and in the higher posts of the civil service.

YOUNG MINKS THRIVE WELL IN CAPTIVITY

Reporter Sees Young Aristocrats of The Fur Kingdom

TELLS OF HABITS

There are Betty, Lizzie, Sallsy and Helen. Not newly-born quadruplets as you may have surmised but four sleek, sharp-eyed aristocratic minxes of the mink family. From the seclusion of their airy cage in the garden of the Misses L. M. and F. M. Rowland, 74 Isabel Street, they eyed with suspicion a representative of the Ontario Intelligencer when he invaded their family domain early today.

Two male members of the family however, were more or less oblivious to the interest of a stranger. They were too busy picking over their breakfast of ground beefsteak and bread. Contrary to the habits of the best mink families, the two animals ate side by side out of the same dish.

A rattling cry echoed in the morning air from seven other sharply built pens which housed the remainder of the fourteen members of the Rowland mink family. Stowed in pairs the young ones of this aristocratic branch of the Canadian fur family climbed swiftly to the top of their wire-enclosed pens when the reporter drew near. Gleaming eyes peered from behind the strong wire mesh. Sharp claws clung tenaciously to the wire and sharp teeth gleamed in anticipation of the morning meal.

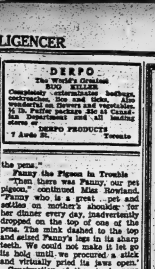
The Morning Bath

Contended and well-fed, the pictures of mink health, the animals curious yet vicious in their natural element, are enjoying life in their captivity. And they appeared undismissed. Here is what their diet consists of: Each day, in addition to varietics, ground beef, bread, a dash of cod liver oil occasionally, bone meal, salt, brewers yeast, an occasional raw egg; raw vegetables and milk. This diet is continued for a period of three days then the menu is changed and their keepers ships dine on meat and vegetables. To-day when they greatly relish raw tomatoes.

"They are scrupulously clean" Miss Rowland said. "They feed off raw fish, they dash to the small water container in their pens clean the fish and eat a portion of it. At intervals they dash to the large water drenching it thoroughly before resuming their meal. They are given a bath once a day in a large pan of water is placed in their pens for the purpose. They love and they dive and swim in it to their heart's content. The water then is removed and not allowed to stay in the pens."

Contrary to popular opinion, mink should not be kept near the water. They will not thrive in damp atmosphere. This is proven in the breeding season when the female, if it is raining outside, will and even now, passing through the body wet, she will refuse her meal out of the covered part of the pen at this time and eat her food. The young do not venture out at all until they are well furred. The female carries pieces of milk-soaking bread to her offspring. And the females are naturally fearless mothers. We dare not look at the young until after a period of about four weeks. If this occurs, the female promptly eats the youngsters."

14 Animals



The Misses Rowland are exceptionally proud of their record so far. Starting the year with four breed females, they now have a mink family of fourteen beautiful animals. They have escaped the sickness which usually threatens animals of this kind in captivity, and even now, passign through the most dangerous season of the year the family show signs of being in splendid health. To this is due in no small part to the intensive study of the habits of the animals on the part of their owners. They have several books on the care of mink and a diligent application to the fundamentals of breeding and care has resulted in the splendid condition of their little colony.

"We are not offering for the market this year," Miss Mabel Rowland said, "we are experimenting with the breeding and raising and if our efforts meet with the same success next year as they have during this season we will gradually increase our stocks. We have a two acre lot on Metra Street which we will use as our family multiplies."

"One of the most important phases of breeding these animals is the segregation of the sexes at the proper time. Females generally produce from two to four young."

Cuffs Gets Curious

"Curiously on the part of some of the family pets nearly resulted in disaster when we first introduced the mink to the family", smiled Miss Rowland. "For instance there is "Jerry", pointing to a fine collie dog which lay nearby, keeping a sharp eye on a male mink who was slowly parading up and down his pen." he got curious one day and foolishly poked his nose through one of the screens to find out what it was all about. There was a brown furry flash and a yelp of pain from Jerry. The mink had bitten him sharply on the nose. From that day to this he doesn't venture near the wire part of the pens. But he hasn't forgotten. Occasionally he goes underneath the pen of the mink that bit him and growls his disapproval of the intrusion of the animals and endeavors to reach him through the wooden floor of

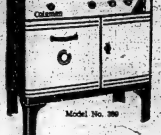
Fanny the Pigeon in Trouble



"Then there was Fanny, our pet pigeon," continued Miss Rowland. "Fanny who is a great pet and cuddles on mother's shoulder for her dinner every day, inadvertently dropped on the top of one of the pens. The mink dashed to the top and seized Fanny's legs in its sharp teeth. We could not make it let go its hold until we procured a stick and virtually pried its jaws open."

Construction of the sturdy pens which house the mink proved no problem for Miss Rowland. "We come from a long line of carpenters," she smiled, "and it was no effort for me to build them. I made all the pens myself, that is my sister and I did, and we intend building more as you can see," pointing to rolls of wire, strong pieces of wood and boxes of nails. When completed the pens are worth from

Value of Mink Skins

"It takes from forty to fifty mink skins to make a coat," Miss Rowland stated," and as these are worth in the neighborhood of fifteen hundred dollars, so you can readily surmise that these little animals are valuable."

The female is easily distinguishable from the male of the species. The female is smaller and differs slightly in its habits. So far we have not had much success in making pets out of them. PLANES, APPARENTLY CHINESE, BOMB U.S. LINER

LINER BOMBED BY FOUR PLANES NEAR SHANGHAI

"President Hoover" Has Been Evacuating Foreigners

JAPAN BEGINS DRIVE

Japanese Complain That Chinese Bombard Hospital Ship

Shanghai, Aug. 30 (AP) — Four planes, apparently Chinese, dropped bombs on the United States liner President Hoover on the high seas off the China coast today.

Seven members of the crew were wounded and three passengers suffered shock, Hoover, Two of the seamen were gravely hurt.

The bombs tore gaps in the Hoover's hull at several points near the water line, but she came about and proceeded toward Kobe, Japan, under her own power.

Two American sub-chasers steamed at forced draft to the scene in response to the liner's calls for medical aid. But, already, the British warship Cumberland was at her side.

The liner proceeding temporarily from Shanghai, was attacked twenty miles off the coast, or about 30 miles, from Woosung, the point where the Yangtze meets the Whangpoo, the city's harbor waterway.

Aimed For Japanese Ships.

Apparently the bombs were aimed at two Japanese warships maneuvering in the vicinity of the Hoover.

United States navy officials ordered the dispatch of the Destroyer Hull McKinley, which was following her, to turn about and proceed toward Kobe, to await further incidents.

The Hoover was hurrying to Shanghai from Manila to pick up 350 Americans desiring evacuation. She would have cleared for Manila early tomorrow.

177 Passengers Aboard.

When she was hit, Hoover had about 207 passengers and 320 crewmen under Captain George W. Yardley.

Why the Weather?

Science Service Meteorologic

The New Zealand weather in this country this scene is used as generally on thermometers that the would like to see it discarded for the centigrade scale, although the latter is mostly used in scientific work.

Gabriel Daniel Fahrenheit (1686-1736), German instrument maker, began making thermometers as early as 1709. He changed his scale quite often, but finally settled on one nearly that now in use. His two reference points were the temperature of the human body, which he took as 96 degrees, and the freezing point of ice, 32 degrees. He is credited as the first to use mercury rather than alcohol, and scale divided into equal parts. His thermometer was generally adopted, and was introduced into England about 1740.

EIGHT OF DEATHS OVER WEEK END DUE TO PARALYSIS

Six Occur in Toronto And Outside in Province of Ontario

DETAILS OF SITUATION

Total Death List For Province From Epidemic is 27

(By The Canadian Press)

Eight week-end deaths sent Ontario's infantile paralysis death toll to 27 since the outbreak of the disease in early June, about 400 persons have been treated in that time, but provincial health officials point to few cases as the serious type which often leads to permanent weakness or other disfigurement.

At Hamilton where an "iron lung" respirator was used in the case of Charles, 22, lost his battle with death. He had been in the machine thirty-five hours. In the city's hospital there, while two new cases were admitted to the isolation ward, 17-year-old Jean Hamilton was reported in fair condition.

Fatal Case in Windsor.

London reported its third fatal case—eight-year-old Robert Slain—but took a more hopeful view of the general situation as five cases discharged and two new cases were admitted, making a total of 43 under treatment. A conference of district medical officers of health was planned for tomorrow in the Western Ontario centre. The city's "iron lung" was being used in treatment of a 19-year-old child with apparently favorable results.

Six deaths during the week-end raised Toronto's fatality lists to 13. In the district there were 20 new infection and in the city around 230.

Stratford, like Toronto and London and many other stricken centres, decided to postpone school opening until after Labor Day. Health officials there set Sept. 17, while Woodstock waited for the regulation opening—Sept. 7.

Six Deaths in Toronto.

Toronto, Aug. 30 (CP)—Six persons died of infantile paralysis in Toronto and district over the week-end, health authorities reported today, bringing the number of deaths here since the epidemic broke out in June to seven up to 15. Twenty-six new cases were reported, raising the total to 342.

Two-year-old Helen McMurray, one of triplets, was among the three Toronto residents who died of the disease which has stricken nearly 400 persons throughout Ontario. The fourth new death was that of a 30-year-old man, Joseph Hamilton Ford. The fifth was that of a 35-year-old Richmond Hill woman and the sixth that of a 19-year-old girl from East York.

Three From District

The three district residents who died were brought into the city because of an increasing lack of space in suburban hospitals. Toronto General Hospital alone had 30 cases crowding crowded. A scarlet fever hospital in Scarboro Township was opened to infantile paralysis sufferers.

Since the epidemic broke out, 27 persons have died in Ontario, Four more than 400 have been stricken and 19, but one death in London, Aug. 19, and another Stratford Saturday and Sunday brought the total to 26.

Calls for serum on the Provincial Health Department from rural Ontario were increasing but officials said there was an adequate supply available.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)— Two more cases of infantile paralysis were reported by Medical Health Officer Dr. S. J. Keyes this morning.

The two cases from Kingston township, were said not to be serious.

VICE-SQUADS MOVE QUICKLY

137 Persons Taken in by G-Men in Three Raids

Trenton, N.J., Aug. 30.—(CP)—The Federal Bureau of investigation, with 137 persons already held in Mercer County jail in a series of vice raids in three states, moved swiftly today in search of the "higher-ups" in its drive to wipe out White Slave Traffic in this section of the United States.

J. Edgar Hoover, who conducted the arrests Saturday night at establishments in Atlantic City, famed as a seashore resort and site of many conventions, Philadelphia and Wilmington, Del., said 27 of the prisoners were "principals, procurers and madames" and 100 inmates and "maids".

Federal agents planned to bring here from New York for questioning today a man identified by Hoover as Harry Feist, who he said was "reputedly a member of the Charles (Lucky) Luciano gang." Luciano is serving a 50-year prison term for vice operations.

Threats to Kidnap Premier's Children Bared over Weekend

Toronto, Aug. 30.—(CP)— The Globe and Mail today says threats to Kidnap Premier Mitchell Hepburn's two adopted children were "to get him" who are being investigated by Ontario Provincial Police while special constables guard the Premier's home near St. Thomas.

The newspaper says further in a despatch dated St. Thomas:

"Warning that Peter and Patsy (the adopted, children) had been marked down for a possible 'snatch' reached Mr. Hepburn a few days after opening of the election campaign. Today his Elgin riding executive were notified they were afraid that he had antagonized C.I.O. interests over there, and to guard against, at a recent meeting realizing in come into Ontario and take care of Hepburn' if such actions were required, was volunteered by several participants in the conference.

"Information as to the Detroit-considered plan to get the Premier is said to have come from a former St. Thomas man who attended the meeting and was so alarmed that he informed Mr. Hepburn was discussed, that he lost no time in getting to the 'other phone afterward and putting the Elgin city executive headquarters wise."

NEW PROBLEM IN U. S. SHIPPING

C. I. O. Seeking to Prevent Ship Carrying War Supplies to China

Washington, Aug. 30 (AP)— Threat by the committee for industrial organization to prevent a United States ship from carrying war supplies to China added a new problem today to the difficulties for Federal officials by the Sino-Japanese conflict.

Ralph Emerson, legislative representative for the National Maritime Union, predicted a sit-down strike by longshoremen to prevent the government-owned freighter, Wichita, from reaching China with a cargo of warplanes and armored wire.

"It will never get past Manila," Emerson said. The National Maritime Union is an affiliate of John L. Lewis' C.I.O.

Emerson also expressed opinion the Maritime Commission, finding itself in a delicate position by virtue of its ownership of the freighter, would take steps to end the threatened walkout.

The Threatened Strike

The Wichita sailed from Baltimore Friday for Manila. Department of State Hull received Japan's official notification of a blockade of Chinese ports.

Japan's warfares said her blockade would be aimed only at Chinese shipping and would not affect "peaceful commerce" of other nations.

Emerson's threat of a sit-down strike to prevent the Wichita from reaching China was interpreted here as an unofficial move to put into operation one of the chief features of American neutrality law—a ban on shipment of war implements to belligerent nations.

Emerson said the seamen were determined not to engage in the hazardous service of carrying war cargoes even if suggestions of a $250 bonus for each crew member were carried out.

WORKERS BEGIN TO TROOP BACK

Montreal, Aug. 30 — (CP) — A majority of 2,000 workers in four Dominion Textile Company mills here returned to work today while in five plants at other points the full force absorption was started or close to 90 per cent early era. The nearly 10,000 employees were on strike at the start of the month.

The Saturday officials of the National Catholic Federation of Textile Workers which called the strikes in a demand for collective bargaining rights, higher wages or shorter hours approved a plan whereby workers would return to work on the old wage-scale pending discussion of their case by the Fair Wage Board.

Temporary M. O. H. Is Named Today For Village

Stirling, Aug. 30 (Special)—Taking precautionary measures as a result of the sudden illness of Allen three-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. Munro of this village, which according to Drs. Edmund Carleton and Harold Welsh shows symptoms of paralysis, Stirling council today closed all swimming pools decided and posters erected prohibiting bathing.

Mayor Thomas Cranston stated today that the opening of schools may be postponed. The co-operation of the Sidney Council will be sought in preventing bathing at Oak Lake.

In the absence of Dr. H. H. Alger, local medical health officer, an emergency meeting of the Board of Health was held today at which Dr. Carleton was appointed temporary medical health officer. All cases of a suspected nature will be closely watched.

Serum was administered to the Munro child and a specimen of spinal fluid went to Toronto for analysis. A communication was received late in the day to the effect that close observation of the patient was advised. The child's condition is at present under quarantine.

CHARGE IS MADE IN BRITISH PRY

Beverly Baxter Complains of Loading of Dice in London

London, Aug. 30.—(AP)—Charges of the battle between Joe Louis and Tommy Farr "isn't a straight fight" appeared in the News Chronicle today as ring devotees planned to spread a wooden night as parties listening to the broadcast from Yankee Stadium tonight.

Beverly Baxter, writing in the Sunday Graphic and the Sunday News, urged that the fans and the fighters were above suspicion but this all-round handling of the dice had been done by those who intended to keep the business of world championships in America.

In a biting general criticism of the American boxing and New York boxing officials and promoters, Baxter asked could Farr beat Louis, "in a straight fight"—purely.

"Can Farr beat Louis, the New York boxing writers, Damon Runyon, Writers, inside men and the American public are thoroughly"—perhaps—with a machine gun!"

From the start of training London's hopes showed that the American opinion that Farr is an unknown, a 15-rounder, and the standing dissenter from these feelings has been Tom Webster of The Sporting Life, London, who, "Farr has been well received' and who has been in Farr's camp since his near relations, everybody in New York from taxidrivers to taxpayers showed that Farr will win."

Betting in London has gone back to four-to-one odds in favor of Louis and three-to-one Farr won't last over seven rounds.

Louis Weighs 197, Farr at 204 1-2

New York, Aug. 30—(AP)— Joe Louis scaled 197 pounds, today for his scheduled 15-rounder, a title match with Tommy Farr in the Yankee Stadium tonight. Farr scaled 204 1-2 pounds.

Both fighters were lighter today than they were last Thursday when they went through weighing-in ceremonies. Louis drew rain from postponement At that time Louis scaled 198 pounds and Farr 207.

Although the weather was cloudy and threatening promoter Mike Jacobs said he was confident that a decision on a postponement until late tonight.

If postponed again, the bout will by staged tomorrow night.

Owner of Meat Store Dumped Out of Car As Bandits Make Escape

One of Men in Hold-up Said to Have Been Armed

REVOLVER FLOURISHED

Tweedie Held With Head Below Instrument Board

Hamilton, Aug. 30 (CP)—Two bandits kidnaped Robert Tweedie, owner of the Duff meat stores, today as he was leaving one of the company's shops at Prospect street and Maple avenue, Westdale, who had collected the cash from the store from the attendants and was later thrown from the bandits' car.

Members of the staff, Leslie Jarrett and Jerry Juniper, saw Tweedie forced into the rear of the cashbox and one of the men snatched the satchel. Tweedie, himself, at that moment stated the attack, and together they hustled him into the automobile and drove away at high speed.

Jarrett leaped into his automobile and gave chase. He was unable to overtake it, and meantime police squad cars were warned and began a search.

Kidnapped Man Not Injured.

The automobile used by the bandits was reported stolen by the owner a few moments after the first alarm was turned in.

One of the bandits is said to have been armed.

The automobile was later found in a deserted spot on the Lincoln Alexander highway. The bandits who parked the car just before it was stolen.

The cashier was dumped from the car on Graham avenue near the foot of the mountain. He was not injured.

He told police that the men had held his head below the instrument board of the car so he could not see them or where he was being driven. One of the thieves poked a revolver into his ribs and told him he was ejected from the automobile it was done so swiftly he did not get a glimpse of the paid.

FOUR ARE SLAIN IN JERUSALEM

Series of Assaults Are Reported From Palestine City

Jerusalem, Aug. 30 (AP)—Three Jews and an Arab were shot to death today in a series of assaults.

A Jewish passenger on a bus between Tel Aviv and Palestine was shot by Arabs from a passing automobile.

An Arab walking to work in the residential section of Jerusalem was killed. Two assaults on the road to Jericho. Police believed this was a development of the bus slaying.

A Jew was found dead in the bottom of a well and another in a field, both shot. They had lived on the Karkur Sharon Plain.

AWAIT APOLOGY FROM JAPANESE

British Press Notes Moderation And Sternness in Note

London, Aug. 30.—(CP Cable) — Great Britain today awaited a formal apology from Japan for the bombing in China of British Ambassador, Sir Hughe Knatchbull-Hugessen.

The note delivered in Tokyo yesterday, demanding, in addition to an apology, "swift punishment of those responsible for the attack" and "assurance by the Japanese authorities that necessary measures will be taken to prevent recurrence of events of such a character," was favorably received by the press.

The moderation of its terms and the broad expression of the principles involved in the shooting of nonbelligerents came in for praise.

TIMBER LIMITS ARE OBTAINED

Expenditure by Ontario Paper Company May be $750,000

Fort Arthur, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)— Hon. Peter Heenan, Ontario Minister of Lands and Forests, said today the Ontario Paper Company, operating newsprint mills at Thorold, Ont., obtained 600 square miles of timber limits on Black River at Heron Bay, 90 miles east of Fort Arthur.

He said a pulpwood and a drum barking mill and other facilities would be $500,000 to $750,000 and that that power would be developed on Black River.

More than 400 men will be employed, company officials said, and about 50,000 cords of wood will be taken out each year.

Another development at Heron Bay was announced by the General Timber Company, who will construct a chemical mill.

War Rumblings 'Round the World

Shanghai, Aug. 30 (AP) — Swift beheading was publicly prescribed—and demonstrated—today as Chinese military authorities today for China's newspaper men and bonzes.

These include such persons as traitors, spies, looters, incendiarists, rumor mongers and those who harbor traitors, poison water sources, arouse anxieties or signal the Japanese enemy. The public executioner, armed with a yard-long sword, put the order into effect yesterday in the Nantao quarter, lopping off the heads of two men and wounding a third.

Shanghai, Aug. 30.(AP)—Japanese officials in this city today declared their belief that the Sino-Russian non-agression pact contains secret military clauses which were not announced when it was signatories of the agreement.

Shanghai, Aug. 30 (AP)—British and American insurance underwriters today estimated the total war damage in Shanghai since Aug. 13 at $175,000,000.

London, Aug. 30 (AP)—The war office announced today it had increased the age limit three years for recruits for all army combatant units while making more men eligible for enlistment.

The new ranges makes it possible to enlist men between the ages of 18 and 28; the old regulation required, on the 18 year old must be 19.

Moscow, Aug. 30 (AP)—Diplomatic circles interpreted a new Soviet-Japanese non-aggression treaty today as a "precaution" by Russia against the possibility of Japan dictating peace terms to China.

They expressed belief that Russia's dominating motive was to extract a pledge by the Chinese government to keep out of any alliance with Tokyo against the Soviet Union.

Six Injured in Car Crash Near Lindsay

Lindsay, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Six persons were injured in an accident last night near Omemee when R. J. Chambers, Toronto, driver and only occupant of the car, suffered head and body injuries. Others injured were:

Louise Woodward, 35, Toronto, driver of the second car; Gladys Woodward, 6, sister; Mrs. Lillian Woodward, Toronto; Laura Knapp, 16, Toronto; and J. Dobson, 37, Toronto.

The accident happened on No. 2 highway as the cars rounded a curve just north of the railway crossing.

City and District News

FIRST SHIPMENT OF TOMATOES MADE

First shipment of heavy bags of Christmas Brazil nuts, consignments of shoe gun cloth, almonds, pinks and paint, along with quantities of stove polish have been the latest arrival at the local Government Dock on the Bay Shore Glen Allan from eastern points, which entered port on Sunday.

Today the first of the season's crop of canned tomatoes were being shipped in from Leamington for Montreal and England consisting of 150 cases by J. G. Sprague of Mountain View. Heavy cargoes of canned tomatoes and other vegetables from the district are expected this year.

On Sunday morning school of the lower end of the city were awakened by the boom of the summer Britannicus which entered port carrying a field cargo for the local British American Company, while today well over one thousand cheese will accompany the Glen Allan with the vegetable cargo.

THREE LOADS HAY YIELD 15 BU. ALFALFA TO HILLIER FARMER

Breaking all records of the district if not the county, Joel Murphy, Hillier farmer, threshed fifteen bushels of alfalfa seed from three loads of the hay on Saturday. The heavily laden alfalfa was by far the best grown in the district according to old timers of the district.

AGRICULTURAL PARK REAL BUSY PLACE

Belleville's agricultural grounds today took on the first actual aspect of the autumn fair will characterize the park during the coming week. This morning for the first time this week and the first exhibitors were being placed in the stalls and checked by an attendant on constant duty. On Saturday, late in the afternoon, a total of 38 sleek race horses had been counted in their stalls first arrivals of one of the heaviest registrations of animals of this class that have been recorded for some time.

LINDSAY FIRM IS LIKELY CONTRACTORS

Announcement is made that the R. Wilford and Company of Lindsay will be likely contractors for the work on the new addition at Lakeland Dominion Experimental Laboratory, East Dundas Street, as lowest bidders in tenders tendered received. Owner of the building addition estimated at $9,000 is the Dominion Department of Public Works. J. Arnold Thomson of East Dundas Street, Toronto, is supervising architect and designer of plans.

HEAVY WEED GROWTH BECOMES NUISANCE

Heavy blands of thick weeds floating in the bay at the present time, of heavy growth for this late season have become the latest annoyance to local pleasure and commercial craft owners using the lower and upper harbors. This season due to favorable conditions one of the heaviest crops in years is reported by artisans of weeds, the nuisance of fouled propellers has become an increasing and frequent one, generally necessitating dry docking of the craft.

DENSE FOG DELAYS HIGHWAY TRAFFIC

Heavy fog of almost pea-soup density rolling in in heavy banks almost tied up traffic along the shore of Lake Ontario on Saturday night. Reeve Edward Cowan of Trafalgar was forced to crawl along at a snail pace, stopping in the bow-ing sections of the county.

Thick films of the white vapor coated windshields of cars and trucks forcing drivers to stop at intervals at the roadside.

Visitors in the city who travelled the highway along the shore of Lake Ontario report similar conditions there.

MANY POSITIONS OPEN FOR DOMESTIC HELP

Housewives of the city returning from vacations are in a quandary as to how to get the autumn housecleaning done. Owing to the early tomato canning season, women day-workers are busy at the various factories, causing a shortage in help for the fall work in the many homes of the city.

Several calls for meals help were registered at the Employment Office this morning with none being available.

LEG BROKEN IN FALL FROM PORCH OF HOME

SPANIEL DOG IS HELD AT POUND

In the custody of the city dog pound today is a little Cocker Spaniel dog. The dog apparently a well-bred animal is found wandering at large, and without a dog tag by Dog Catcher Thos. Thorne. The animal was held for the seven-additional 48 hours before being destroyed, if not claimed.

CARRIER PIGEON NEAR EXHAUSTION

In a state of near exhaustion a racing or carrier pigeon arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Vanorder, Point Anne, on Saturday. The bird is a young one and was noticeably exhausted when it came down for rest in Mr. Vanorder's barn, where it is being cared for. The bird was banded with a metal bird band bearing the inscription AA 37 DPA 37. Until the owner of the bird is located, Mr. Vanorder is affording it shelter in accordance with Constable B. Bennett, Point Anne, as he reported the matter over the week end.

Mrs. H. Langabeer Gets Two Bass on One Cast

Bass fishing in the Bay of Quinte —why, there is nothing to it, at least so thinks Mrs. Harry Langabeer of this city who is spending the summer at a cottage on Massassaga Point.

Casting in the waters off the point yesterday, Mrs. Langabeer felt a sudden tug at the line. Hauling it in her eye opened with astonishment when she saw two fine specimens of the bass family securely hooked on the line. The fish had apparently stuck simultaneously, for one which weighed one and one half pounds, had hooked in the middle hook while the other fish, a one-pounder was secured to the end hook of the gang.

MAIL BOX POST BROKEN BY CAR
After breaking off a mail box post and subsequently coming to a stop as it struck an adjacent telephone pole, a large sedan was found abandoned on the south side of Highway No. 2 a few yards east of the Belleville city limits at 1.00 a.m. Sunday.
Provincial Constable Wm. McIlrien investigated and disclosed the vehicle had been stolen from the home of George Green, Point Anne. According to persons found in the vicinity of the abandoned car, Mr. Green had been driving at a high rate of the accident, police stated, but after the accident had procured a ride home to Point Anne in a passing taxi, leaving the vehicle in the ditch.
The articles left in the vehicle were later removed to the owner's family.
The car was ordered towed to a local garage by the O.P.P. Provincial Constable who was noticeably damaged about the radiator and fender. Constable Bennett of today's local police court Garnished Green when he came down for rest in Mr. Vanorder's barn, where it is being cared for. The bird was banded with a metal bird band bearing the inscription AA 37 DPA 37. Until the owner of the bird is located, Mr. Vanorder is affording it shelter in accordance with Constable B. CLASS MEMBERS HOLD REUNION
Twelve Members of III C, 1917 Renew Friendships of Twenty Years Ago

(Contributed)
History was made last Friday evening when Class IIIC, 1917, of the Belleville High School held a reunion at the Quinte Hotel. Twelve members with seven guests, sat down to dinner. The long table was decorated in the class colours, black, hallotrope and scarlet, with candles and ribbons. Principal P.C. and Mrs. MacLaurin lent dignity to the occasion, while Dr. Harry Carleton, Norwood, acted as chairman.
Much time was paid to teachers dead, but not forgotten.—Mr. F. E. Wilson, Miss Emily C. Reed, Mr. T. H. Pennell (killed in War, 1916), Miss Libby, Mr. W. W. Knight, and to deceased members of the class, William Murray (killed in action), Miss Edna Bowerman, Miss Florence Thompson, and Shelly Wallbridge.
After greeting the assembled guests, the chairman gave a review of each of the deceased members of the class graduated two decades ago, with special reference to the absent ones. Following Mr. MacLaurin spoke to the ex-students in his old friendly manner, expressing his appreciation at the reunion, at the first reunion of any class graduating from B. H. S. He also spoke the idea of close union of class members, ripening after graduation into an active alumnus, and expressed the hope that out of this reunion there would grow an alumnae association of the Belleville High (Collegiate) School.
A letter from a much esteemed teacher, Miss Claire Hilchon, was read, the contents of which were much appreciated by the listeners. Then each member present responded and entertaining part of the program.

Plan Another Reunion

The feeling was expressed by all present that another reunion be held in the near future. To assure this, the class immediately organized, the officers appointed being: Dr. Harry G. Carleton, Norwood, Ontario, president; Mrs. Walter Allore, Hotel Belvidere, Belleville, Ontario, secretary; and Mrs. Ross Wills, 15 Campbell Street, Belleville, treasurer.
At the conclusion, the chairman expressed his sincere appreciation of the response made by those present, and the interest shown by those unavoidably absent. The warmth of feeling shown between the different members was adequate recompense to those who were responsible for the gathering. As the close, "Auld Lang Syne" was sung, with joined hands, and then the National Anthem.
Those present included Mr. and Mrs. P. C. MacLaurin; Oliver Owen; Tom Wills; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Allore (Claire Hughes); Mr. and Mrs. Holmes (Pearl English); Mr. and Mrs. Douglas K. Reeher; Dr. Carl Brownson, of Belleville; Miss Claire Courbin, Windsor; Mr. Roy Powell and Miss MacDonald, Peterborough; Dr. and Mrs. Perte Marshall, Oshawa; Dr. and Mrs. Harry Carleton, Norwood; Mrs. Bannerman (Harriet McNeish), Hanover, New Hampshire; and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Graham (Marjorie Hurzek), Hillier.

AMPUTATED FEET OF YOUNG BOY
Will Dombroski, Killaloe, Terribly Injured by Binder Knives

Amputation of both feet of five year-old William Dombroski, small son of Mr. Alex Dombroski of Killaloe, was found necessary after severe injuries received when the small boy stepped in front of a grain binder driven by his father last week.

When the horses stepped forward unexpectedly the boy who was standing directly in front of the binder received terrible injuries to both feet. He was rushed to the hospital after receiving first aid treatment, where amputation operation was performed by Dr. I. T. Cotnam, attending physician.

Breaks Arm Three Times in 18 Months

When thirteen year old Phyllis Head, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Head, Wellington, fell and fractured her arm on Friday it marked the fifth time in eighteen months that the member has been broken.
Falling from a small express wagon, the girl rolled over in agony, but little help was anticipated as an examination revealed a compound fracture of both bones of the right arm. Six months ago, the injured girl slipped and fell from the porch fracturing the arm which nine months previously had been broken by another fall.
The "floating bone" caused by the fall which is being cared for is fully observed by Wallington physicians.

DRUNKEN DRIVER GIVEN TEN DAYS
"Down in Wellington we are more severe in meting out sentences to persons convicted of drunken driving. The sentence in that part of the province runs anywhere from 15 to 30 days for persons convicted of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated," stated Magistrate Shea, Kingston, while presiding over the Belleville police court proceedings here today, when a ten-day sentence was proposed in the case of such nature.
A lengthy police court docket welcomed Magistrate Shea to the court today, consisting solely of Highway and Liquor Control Act charges. Frank Hawley, Demorestville threshman pleaded guilty to operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated and was sentenced to serve ten days in jail. On a subsequent charge of operating a motor vehicle without a driver's license in good working order, the accused was fined $10.00 and costs.
The case arose out of an accident that happened on James Street, last night, when Hawley car collided with the rear end of another automobile damaging both vehicles considerably. The windshield of Hawley's car was broken but fortunately he did not sustain lacerations from flying glass.

Obituary

RUSSELL SEELEY (Frankford)
The death occurred at the Belleville General Hospital early this Monday morning, Aug. 30th, of Russell Seeley, R. R. 2, Frankford, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Seeley of the same address. He was 33 years of age and had been a patient at the hospital since Aug. 27.

LATE MURRAY GRAHAM
Tweed, Aug. 30—The United Church at Bethel was taxed to its utmost capacity Sunday afternoon to accommodate the throng of friends and relatives who had gathered to pay their last tribute of respect to the memory of the late Murray Graham, Tuesday. The deceased farmer of Hungerford Township, who passed away suddenly at Belleville General Hospital on Thursday.
The funeral service was conducted by Rev. R. B. Harrington pastor of the United Church who spoke on the theme "What think ye of Christ?" delivering a message of comfort to the sorrowing wife and family of the deceased.
The choir of Bethel Church sang an anthem and Mrs. H. B. Herring-ton rendered the solo "Beautiful Hands."
The service was under the direction of the Masonic Lodge of Tweed of which the deceased was a life member.
The late M. Graham is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Mary Sullivan; four daughters, Mrs. O. Wilkinson, Chapman's Corners; Mrs. Wilkinson, Chapman's Corners; Mrs. R. S. Wheller, Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. Geo. Yeomans, Hungerford Township; two sons, Stanley of Belleville and Clarence at home; four sisters, Mrs. Joseph Emerson, Tweed; Mrs. Henry Lamb, Redneersville; Mrs. James Marchen, Peterborough; Mrs. Percy Cronkwright, Carrying Place; one brother, Mr. Harry Kennedy, Thomasburg.
The floral tributes were: Mr. Harold Emerson Mr. R. T. Graham, Mr. Percy Graham, Mr. Harry Lamb, Mr. Harry Kennedy, and Mr. Joseph Emerson.
Interment was in Thomasburg cemetery.

MRS. ISABEL BIGGS
After a lengthy illness, Mrs. Isabel Biggs, former residence Belleville, died at Hamilton, Ont., on Saturday last.
The late Mrs. Biggs, who was in her 42nd year was born in Newfoundland, her parents being the late Mr. and Mrs. William Mann. She had been a resident of Scotch Siding, N.B., and for twenty years of her late days resided in Belleville. Friends here will regret to learn of her passing. When in her youth she was a faithful attendant at the Tabernacle United Church.
Surviving her are a daughter, Mrs. Maxwell Embury, and one grandson, Ronald, and Gerald Embury, all of Harold, Ont.
Funeral of the late Mrs. Biggs is resting at the Belleville Burial Company Funeral Chapel, Victoria Street. The funeral announcement is made elsewhere in this paper.

POLICE BLOTTER

A feminine knight of the rods was taken to task in police court on an express train in Belleville last evening. The girl, gave her name as Viola Miller, 19 years of Hamilton lass.
The girl was observed riding on the steps of a passenger coach between the coach platforms, by Constable Bennett, immediately removed the girl from her dangerous position, and found that she had boarded the train at Brockville and had ridden from that point a distance. She was returning home to Hamilton, she stated to police after being taken out of the local authorities last night.
Efforts to contact the parents were made through Hamilton police authorities today, in the meantime the girl is being detained.
Eight panes of frosted glass were broken in the washroom at the East Belleville playgrounds yesterday. Truffle Officer Fitch reported to police that four children loitering in vicinity. The children were questioned and admitted that they delighted to have thrown the stones, that resulted in the windows being broken. The matter was reported to the local playground committee.
Failing to observe the sudden halting of a truck in front of his approaching motor car resulted in an automobile, driven by William Hollingsworth, Stanley Street, and a large truck on Front Street, Saturday afternoon, doing damage to fenders and headlights on Mr. Rosebush's car were badly damaged during the collision. The truck, driven by a man who gave his name as Wilfred Hall, was stopped while it attempted to turn off Bridge Street to proceed east on Front Street when the traffic came to a halt. The truck driver stopped his vehicle with the result that travelling in the wake, failed to see the truck stop and collided with the rear of the larger vehicle. No damage was reported to the car and the accident was not necessary under the prevailing circumstances.

POLICE COURT

In the absence of His Worship Magistrate K. J. Butler, K.C., who is holidaying, Magistrate Shea of Kingston presided over local police court and was welcomed to the bench by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C.
All cases submitted before the court were for alleged breaches of the Highway Traffic or Liquor Control Acts. Vincent Mierpol pleaded guilty to the operation of a motor vehicle, but did not have his brakes in proper working order. Defective brakes, the conventional fine of ten dollars and costs was imposed. Similar charges of defective brakes, were laid against Frank Simpson, William Lazarick, Thurlow, while Albert Purdon of Thurlow, while Albert Purdon of Shannonville was assessed five dollars and costs because he failed to notify the Department of Highways of the change of ownership of a motor vehicle within five days of the purchase of the vehicle, while Al Chernin, Montreal, pleaded guilty to a charge of reckless driving and was fined $10.00 and costs. Lazarick also pleaded guilty to a charge of reckless driving and was assessed an additional ten and costs.
The latter case arose out of an accident that happened three miles west of Deseronto, and resulted in arrested from Hamilton.

ABOUT TRUSSES

This Truss represents one of twenty-one types we make and is the result of over 60 years of experience in making and fitting trusses. It is built on spoon, spiral, leg-piece and groin principle, and, when made specially to your measure, and fitted, scarcely shows the opening and allows Nature to thicken the parts so that, the hernia cannot escape. This together use, the Truss will soon permanently relieve the condition.

Crown Jewels Exhibit

I paid my first visit to the Toronto Exhibition (really, Canada's famous Annual World's Fair) for 1937 this afternoon (August 30) at four o'clock, and saw the most interesting spectacle of my entire life. A few special invitations were sent out by the Exhibition authorities to a favored few, who were given the opportunity of viewing the wonderful display of Crown Jewels in a private way before the Exhibition opens to the public to-morrow. One of these invitations fell into my hands and I had an excellent opportunity of seeing, hearing and writing for the benefit of thousands who for various reasons cannot attend. It is not easy to make you see the rare beauty, grandeur, and glory of it all, but I am going to try very hard to do my best.

Mayor Robbins of the city of Toronto, one of the distinguished guests in our select party, amused us greatly by putting on the cap and coronet of a nobleman who attended the recent coronation. I shook hands with the genial Mayor, and told him that he looked the part to perfection, and that noblemen were neither born nor made, but just happened.

The Jewels Exhibit is in the Automotive Building, a strong castle-like stronghold near the east gate. It is in this building that another much talked about exhibit is displayed, the collections of postage stamps which I will write about fully soon.

As you enter the large display room to view the Crown Jewels, you pass two stalwart young men dressed in the costume of English State Trumpeters, and thus begin to acquire a background for what is to come. Your first general impression of the well lighted and perfectly arranged Exhibit is one of awe and great splendor. It far surpasses all we saw of the kind in the Coliseum of Rome or in Napoleon's Museum in Paris at Fontainebleau.

Two thousand separate pieces of crowns, coronets, swords, sceptres, tiaras, necklaces, plate, costumes, armour and such historic things are in this collection, splendidly classified and arranged for brief description. Yet though they are all replicas or imitations we found them to be exact copies of the originals in less expensive materials. This gives us our greatest thrill.

A young man and a young woman are always ready to give any desired information after first giving you a booklet, "Crown Jewels Exhibit, Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, 1937". This booklet lists the various themes of the exhibit along with dates, names and brief descriptions from King Alfred 871 A.D. to the present time. The list includes not only those from England, but also from Scotland, France, Germany and other countries. It is much more complete as an exhibit of Crown Jewels than anything we have ever known or heard about.

When you become tired sitting, looking and walking, you go to a large refreshment table in a corner of the exhibit room, and have all the good things you can eat and drink. It is a real feast in more ways than one.

A FEW DETAILED DESCRIPTIONS

It is not possible to describe every item of this large exhibit but a few typical ones now follow.

1. The coronets (little crowns) worn by Princess Elizabeth, and her sister Princess Margaret Rose, at the recent Coronation, are exactly the same, and are very lovely because of their childish simplicity. Each consists of a band of gold about an inch wide which fits about half way down the forehead, and on this band adheres upright small Maltese crosses and fleur-de-lis, alternating one with the other, and all spaced slightly apart. The top, like the base crown of a hat, consists of very beautiful rose velvet which is fastened to the metal band. These beautiful, blonde little girls would look very lonely in these coronets.

2. The coronets of a marchioness, a viscountess, a countess, duchess or baron are very similar in every way to those of the two Princesses just described. About the only difference is the absence of the Maltese crosses and fleur-de-lis and in their place a few silver-like balls uniform in size, but in one case two inches in diameter, while in other only an inch. The effect is more elaborate and more becoming for adults. Not a jewel of any kind can be found on any coronet, and this fact, along with their small size, makes them contrast strongly with the much larger royal crowns more or less heavily loaded with precious jewels. A few of the latter will now be described.

3. The crowns of England for King, Queen and Prince of Wales are large and well covered with the most precious jewels. The King's crown is the largest and most ornate, and bears conspicuously in the front the largest diamond ever known. The Queen's crown is a little lighter and smaller with fewer costly jewels. The crown of the Prince of Wales is simpler still.

4. The Imperial crown of Austria is very gaudy with many pearls, and green and red jewels.

5. The Russian crown is grand and dignified with only diamonds of various sizes, enough to be impressive.

6. The crown of the German Empress is the most ornate imaginable, and is tasteless. This crown contains plenty of every kind of jewel fairly well placed for balance, harmony and variety but you have a strong feeling of surfeit.

7. The crown of Bohemia is striking in its heavy frame-work of gold. Its jewels are large and beautiful and chiefly green or red.

8. The Royal Crown of the Bourbons (France) is very showy but in good taste. The heavy gold frame-work is covered plentifully with diamonds, pearls, green, blue and red jewels. All these precious stones are wonderfully graduated as to size, and arranged with that superb artistic taste so natural to the French.

9. The crown of Serbia is in a class entirely by itself, because, while all the others are more or less open in the crown, it is a solid headpiece of gold with a band of gold running around the bottom, and shorter narrower bands running from the bottom to the apex. This arrangement in contrast with the others strikes you as crude, even though it is sparingly dotted with fair sized diamonds.

The above descriptions will give you a fair idea of many others including the crown of Charlemagne (Early France) which is so crude, and different that imagination can do more than description.

TIARAS AND NECKLACES

The ladies would never forget these because they are so lovely in design, workmanship and material. They consist of diamonds, pearls, and various beautifully tinted stones, sometimes all diamonds, or all pearls, and then all together and finally you cannot say which is the most lovely. The workmanship of joining the parts loosely, symmetrically, and in perfect gradation, holds you spellbound like some pictures I saw in London, Edinburgh and Paris. I can forgive any woman for loving dearly such beautiful specimens of personal adornment. They are beautiful and she is beautiful, and they were made for each other, and the great glory of their Creator.

The designs of the tiaras are all much the same in principle. Imagine a band, open at the back, around your forehead and then gradually build bits up from the front and sides, from a 1/8th strip at the back of the tiaras to five inches high in the centre of the forehead. This is the most exquisite element when studded with diamonds to enrich a woman's naturally beautiful head of hair. A woman is irresistible when her soul shines through her eyes beneath the scintillation of many diamonds. The sparkle of her eyes vies with the sparkle of diamonds. The combination behold the cosmos of beautiful tiaras with flushed cheeks, and mere man wonder what there was for him in this world to make the opposite sex take him more zealously.

The necklaces were more varied and striking in design than the tiaras. Beyond the fact that the necklaces consisted of all sorts of precious stones, variously arranged, they are hard to describe because so different from any usually seen.

ANCIENT ARMOUR

Boys would be delighted to see the display of ancient armour in this exhibit. There are four full size, and fourteen about half size. Every period of the past for England and Europe is represented, and the different types are very interesting. In ancient days before the discovery of gunpowder, men, especially mail leave, noble knights fought in a suit of armour or sheet metal to protect them from the thrusts of sword or lance. If a knight fell during an encounter from his horse, he was injured by the weight of his armour, and easily killed by the enemy.

ARRANGEMENT OF EXHIBITS

The various articles of Crown Jewels were arranged in small related groups in seven-sided glass cases, or in glass cases in the sides of the walls. This gave the maximum opportunity for inspection, and for handling the large crowns which are sure to swarm around this highly educational display. Every boy and girl in Ontario should be permitted to see it. Perhaps it may be sent on a travelling tour?

STATE COSTUMES

Many of the State Costumes used in various British high functions are in this exhibit also. They are chiefly conspicuous for their fine red cloth and a plentitude of gold braid. Some purple and ermine are also to be seen. You could never doubt that "FINE FEATHERS MAKE FINE BIRDS", after paying a good long visit to the Crown Jewels Exhibit.

GIFT SHOW

Three floors of one of Toronto's best downtown hotels are this week occupied by scores of firms who manufacture articles suitable for gifts. Each firm has a display typical of its output. After writing the above, I paid a visit to most of these rooms, and found many old business friends, but at one room I ran into a great surprise. The room and display was in charge of a young business woman whom I had known for several years, and always proved to be ideal in every way. She is now between 35 and 40 and one of the best business executives I have ever known.

"Hello Miss G., busy and happy as usual." I see.

"Busy all right but not as happy as I appear" she replied still smiling. "Not a chick nor a child; just you and your mother, and the best job in the world." Surely you are joking, because I never knew another woman half so good."

"That's just the trouble: I'm taken so much for granted when things are not what they seem. About fifteen years ago I was engaged to be married to a man I loved devotedly. Within a few days of our appointed wedding, he died suddenly of pneumonia, and I have never been able to love a man well enough to marry him since. I have learned to be a home, and children, and like Queen Elizabeth I am forlorn, because these are forever impossible. I meet happy husbands and wives with their children almost every day, and beneath a cheerful, smiling, efficient exterior my heart aches terribly, and I can do nothing about it but go on and appear as you think, "a remarkable supervisor."

I assured Miss G. of my sympathy, and said that there was one event in my own life that was inexplicable too, but that I thought it was for the best and that some time somewhere I would understand. Then I quoted the verses that appeared in my last article about Faith, which soothed my troubled soul from Eastern Ontario as we came on the train together to Toronto. Tears came to her eyes too, and at her request I wrote it down for her. The surprise here was that Miss G., the one in all the world whom for years I had believed to be happy and contented, really found life to be painful and difficult. I am still searching for one soul that is supremely happy.

BICYCLES

Bicycles are licensed in Toronto similar to cars at one dollar a year, and outside of Toronto in the townships, the fee is fifty cents per year. It is said that this plan works well in many ways, especially in cases of theft. More soon.

Best wishes to all.

You Pay No More For Assured Value

Have you noticed how everybody is stressing quality in used cars these days? Truly it would seem that the used car shopper is finally getting a break.

We have been stressing quality ever since we started selling used cars. What's more, we have actually been selling quality, and folks have been coming back to us and bringing their friends, because we sold only used cars that made good in the owner's hands.

If we can't restore a used car to its original mechanical quality, we do not offer it for sale to our customer. It goes to the junk man or a wrecker.

We will match our used cars against the rank and file of all cars in operation today, and go on record that they are better than the average of cars in daily use. No reason why a used car buyer should not drive as good a car as anybody else.

Bargains? Lots of them, but while they sell in low figures, they embody the highest standard of quality.

Drop in and look over the prettiest assortment of fine used cars you ever saw.

Robert Hopkins, Jack Conway's deft direction is apparent at every moment.

"Saratoga" tells the story of the spoiled daughter of a wealthy horse-owner, and a gambler and bookmaker whom she first hates, fights, then loves. The background of the swift action ranges from penthouses and a London hotel to a Kentucky horse farm, the Saratoga racetrack, and famous races on tracks in various points of the United States. The final racing climax, photographed by special equipment, provides a genuine thrill.

Sédzro-Goldwyn-Mayer gave the picture an elaborate cast. Frank Morgan and Una Merkel are seen together as a comedy team for the first time, and amply justify as well as a song are contributed by Cliff Edwards and his ukelele, Lionel Barrymore, Walter Pidgeon, George Zucco, Jonathan Hale, Hattie McDaniels, Frankie Darro and Henry Stone are seen in prominent roles. Thousands appear in the racing and grandstand sequences.

One of the most interesting sequences takes place in Lionel Barrymore's horse-breeding farm where thoroughbred colts and fillies ranging from famous race horses to young colts, all brought from stock farms in California, appear. One of the most dramatic scenes is that in which Miss Harlow, all dolled up for Clark Gable and seeing him "go broke" through her activities, realizing that she loves him.

Edward Ward provided the picture with an almost symphonic score and the photography by Ray June, A.S.C., adds definitely to the effective dramatic situations.

Grand Featurettes

A grand array of varied featurettes precede the feature attraction including the World News Events, Robert Benchley in "The Romance of Indigestion" and a beautiful travelogue in color, "Picturesque South Africa."

"Saratoga" will be repeated again Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, matinee and evening and is a thrilling heart-warming romantic drama and perfect entertainment. See it and you'll join us in singing its praises.

BELLEVILLE FAIR

Months of preparation are to reach their reward tomorrow and the ensuing days at Belleville Fair is held. Plans for one fair date back from the previous ones, which means that twelve months' labor is expended on these institutions which mean so much for the agricultural and urban community in the demonstration it gives of the progress of farming and industry and in the creation of a district community spirit.

The past few days have shown all the signs of a successful fair. The exhibition park has been a hive of industry. Not a space of any consequence but has seen every activity which spells a happy augury for the coming four days. The buildings and sheds have been centres of enthusiastic operations for the time and there has been a bustling movement in all parts of the grounds.

Weather conditions at its believed will be ideal for the fair attendance.

The officials and directors of the fair have done everything to make the institution a success in its rural and industrial aspects. The best in every class of exhibits is there, the entertainment program ought to please the patrons and so the final duty rests upon the people to attend for however excellent the exhibits no fair can be called a success which does not attract and secure the crowds. The people are a part of every fair.

MAUDE ADAMS A PROFESSOR

Maude Adams, stage creator of th eoriginal Peter Pan of Sir James Barrie, has been named Professor of Drama at Stephens College in Missouri for September, October and November but it is hoped to make the appointment permanent and to found there the "Maude Adams School of Drama."

Stephens College has an enrolment of 1170 girls.

Miss Adams will build her first work around Rostand's play "Chantecler".

Except for a twenty-six-week tour in 1931-32 in "The Merchant of Venice" and a few summer appearances in "Twelfth Night" a few years later, Miss Adams has been in retirement since 1918. She suffered a nervous breakdown following a series of illnesses while on tour with Barrie's "A Kiss for Cinderella" and when she regained her health busied herself with the problems of stage lighting and design and colored movies. For several years she worked on those two problems at the General Electric laboratories in Schenectady, collaborating with the electrical genius, Charles Steinmetz.

Even as an actress, in those years when she and Charles Frohman collaborated in giving America her unsurpassed interpretations of Barrie's fragile plays, her ability as a director was only rated second to her ability as an actress. Mr. Frohman himself never interfered with her in the Barrie plays nor overruled a decision of hers as to interpretation, it was said.

When she retired Miss Adams was rated one of the wealthiest woman of the stage, but she since has given away much of her fortune and spent thousands of dollars on her experiments with color movies and stage lighting. She also paid $50,000 for the movie rights to Rudyard Kipling's "Kim", held it for eight years and then relinquished title without having produced it.

For many years she lived in seclusion on her estate, Shady Girth, near Lake Ronkonkoma, L. I., part of which she had willed to the Canacle Sisters, a Belgian Roman Catholic teaching order, for use as a retreat. Although a Protestant, Miss Adams found sanctuary in the convent of the order in 140th Street during her convalescence from her breakdown in 1918 and was motivated by gratitude. Last May she moved to her 1,200-acre estate in the Catskills, where she lives with her secretary, a maid, a housekeeper and the housekeeper's husband, the only man on the place.

Although 64 years old, Miss Adams is said to look twenty years younger, her face still unwrinkled, her auburn hair showing no trace of gray and the flute-like voice which thrilled America's theatregoers in "The Little Minister," "Peter Pan," "Quality Street," "The Masked Ball" and her other great plays still as vibrant as it was many years ago.

"THERE IS A NIGHTINGALE"

There is a nightingale within my breast
That would out-pour her music far and wide.
She beats her wings against the bars that hide
Her captive charms. Imprisoned, yes, suppressed,
And I her witless jailer—cruel jest;
For I would free her to the mountainside
Where she might voice abroad the breathless tide
Of raptured singing with unbounded zest.
Sing, nightingale, within thy dungeon dark.
Sing, though each melody, each frenzied phrase
Emerge, distorted, from a wordless veil.
O inspiration, come, elusive spark!
Ignite these prison bars, inflame the blaze,
And free my yearning soul, my nightingale.

A YOUNG HITCH-HIKER paused in the shadows of Albert College, at the brow of the hill overlooking the city of Belleville, and proceeded to make himself presentable before entering the city. He carried a shaving outfit and finding a bubbling spring nearby proceeded to work up a lather. The lather refused to work up and to a citizen who approached he remarked: "This is the darndest water I ever experienced, seems impossible to work up a lather." "No wonder," said the citizen who was a regular visitor to this well-known mineral spring to drink the water—"that water is so hard that you couldn't work up a lather in a thousand years with it." "Is it good to drink?" queried the hitch-hiker. "Nothing else but," said the citizen, "I drink it and it does me good, others that I know also drink this water for their health and all swear by it." "Well," said the hitch-hiker, "if its free I guess I'll drink a lot of it in case something goes wrong with my works, and postpone shaving until softer water is available."

WESTERN CANADA AS THE LAND OF PROMISE is losing somewhat of its grit owing to drought, sand storms, grasshoppers and Athabaskan. Evidence accumulates that western farmers are turning their eyes longingly toward the East. In fact, the trek back East has already started, and the Brighton Ensign notes the arrival of six families at that town from the West, thirty people in all, with household effects, stock, etc., in freight cars, to settle on farms in that vicinity. Eighty head of horses and cattle accompanied the new settlers, who were preceded by their wives and children. Southern Saskatchewan, where these farmers sought to woo wealth from the soil and were blasted by drought year after year, until hope perished, now looks to the East as a land of promise. Eleven freight cars carried their goods from Spring Valley, 75 miles southwest of Regina, where six families had been neighbors and arrived at the conclusion simultaneously that longer stay there would only mean more debt and trouble. The women and children who arrived two days ahead of the men were domiciled in a vacant farm house, while Ontario Government representatives were making arrangements for farms for the various families.

TRISTAN DE CUNHA IS JUST A SPECK ON THE OCEAN where a few descendants of one time British garrison stationed there to prevent Napoleon from escaping from St. Helena, and have a very precarious being, relieved by gifts from the British King and others interested. Recently the first mail came in for many moons and the first letter the resident clergyman-doctor opened was a demand for income tax. Just shows that it is impossible to dodge the tax collector, even by hiding on the smallest isle of the sea. Whoever linked up death and taxes as the surest things on earth said a mouthful.

RACING STABLES NOW ON GROUNDS

Greatest Number of High Class Horses Belleville Has Had in Years

So great has been the influx of harness horses for the racing meet to be staged at the Belleville Fair starting on Wednesday and continuing until Friday, that the racing committee have been hard put to find accommodation for all. Twenty eight horses, that raced at Ottawa last week moved in over the week-end and some more are expected today. The colony took up quarters early on Saturday and from then till late on Sunday, the fairgrounds was a hive of industry as the important horsefleet was safely put away in snow white stalls and every comfort given them. Bikes and sulkies were put in place, while others were engaged in cleaning harness and preparing a horse for the next week.

The most important stables in this Province will have entries for the several classes, that are down for decision. These horses all raced at Ottawa and they certainly "turned on the juice" in grand style. Hesita in 2.09 were just buggy rides with 2.07 and 2.06 being common occurrences. Peter Clifford turned in the best performance with a mile in 2.06 1-4. To break the track record and this chestnut stallion will be seen in action in this city. Gratian Axworthy, who chased Peter Chilcoot to the wire is also in the grounds and with Gold Lisa beaming him anything is liable to happen. Also here for the fast class is Tom Gratian and the Pine Ridge stable and these three should give the customers a few thrills.

Fayette Stable En Lou Bennett, who has in his stable Tramp Abbe, who paced so well at Napanee and Axworthy Gratian a green pacer besides a couple of colts is on hand and with 'Skid' Craig in the pilot house will make other entrants step to town. Clifford Chapman, who always has a good stable arrived with Midnight Gratian, a winner at Ottawa, Benny Harvester and a couple of green ones. Dr. Rathe has Royal McKillop, a local owned horse and Springtime McKillop a trotter in low and is ready for the bearcats while J. T. Payette, who has not raced in this city for years has his good pacers Simcoe Harvester, Just Peter and Whitelea Mal slabled on the grounds.

Mr. C. W. Blanchard of Newmarket came in with a one horse string, Walter Gratian, but what a grand trotter he is. He won with ease at Ottawa and right now is in order for a grand week of racing. He is ready for a stiff race. All of the horses had tough sledding in Ottawa due to the extreme heat and the fast miles turned in but they will have a good rest before starting after the track record in this city, which is liable to get quite a beating before the week is over. The track is in fair shape but is badly in need of rain to make it firm but the committee sensing no rain in sight, had it well watered over the week-end and should be "slim" when the word is given for the first heat on Wednesday. The program will open with the 2.26 class and the 2.14 class on Wednesday with every heat a race. Dr. Wellbanks has been selected as starter and everything is in order for a grand week of racing.

WILLING TO HAVE SUPREME COURT TO DECIDE ISSUE

Whether C.T.A. or O.T.A. is Superior Legislation in Province

CHEAPER POWER

Premier Says He is Trying to Make Power Cheap For Farmers

Kincardine, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Willingness to have the Supreme Court of Canada decide whether the Canada Temperance Act is superior legislation to the Ontario Liquor Control Act was expressed here Saturday night by Premier Mitchell Hepburn.

If any casualty in which temperance forces believe the Canada Temperance Act, Federal Legislation which forbids the sale of alcoholic drinks, should be the ruling statute will be formal application to his government, a stated case will be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Hepburn said.

Meanwhile the Ontario government will follow two decisions against the Canada Temperance Act—one by an Ontario County Judge in Brampton holding the Liquor Control Act the more restrictive legislation—and therefore the law in force—and one by the New Brunswick Supreme Court holding the C.T.A. was operative by provincial statutes, the Premier said.

(The Canada Temperance Act was in operation in several Ontario counties before enactment in 1916 of the Ontario Temperance Act which then superseded it. When the Ontario Liquor Control Act was enacted temperance forces contended those areas formerly under the Canada Temperance Act should revert to that statute. The C.T.A. does not forbid importation of liquor into areas governed by it.)

No Fear of Shortage

His government is trying to make power so cheap every rural farmer may enjoy the benefits, the rural audience chiefly as he discussed Liberal administration of Ontario's publicly-owned Hydro-Electric System.

"There is no fear of a power shortage as Mr. Rowe (Hon. Earl Rowe) would have you believe," said Mr. Hepburn. "If Mr. Rowe would spend less time following his race horse and more time studying the affairs of the province, he would be able to talk more intelligently. I chose the people of Ontario over the power barons of Quebec and am prepared to do so in the future."

Settlements of succession duties claims and other matters in the Treasury Department in the previous Conservative administration was the blackest blot in the history of British jurisdiction," said the Premier as he asked for a renewal of his mandate that he might collect all "rightfully due" the province.

FATAL TRIP IN A LIGHT CANOE

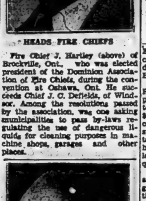
Five Drown as Canoe Upsets in Heavy Swell

Smooth Rock Falls, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Funeral arrangements were made today for five drowning victims of this community 15 miles northwest of Cochrane, whose fatal upsetting in a light canoe was described by Coroner E. R. Tucker as a "suicidal risk."

The four ranging in ages from 17 to 26, were Leo Daigneault, Maury Murray, Edward and Anthony Linitki, brothers, and a Miss Sicard.

The party was crossing an arm of Departure Lake, nine miles west of here, Saturday in a 16-foot canoe equipped with an outboard motor. The coroner's statement said a heavy sea was running and a short distance from shore the canoe was swamped. All were drowned in 20 feet of water.

Coroner Tucker said in a statement there would not be an inquest into the quintuple fatality. Those responsible for the accident were dead, the statement said.



After recovery of the canoe and bodies, the Coroner tested the canoe with the persons of approximately the same weight as the five who were drowned. The test showed the canoe had a free-board of less than three inches amidships in calm water. In the rough water running at the time of the accident, the occupants did not have a chance, Coroner Tucker's statement said.

ROWE CHALLENGES PREMIER HEPBURN ON COLLECTIONS

Wants to be Shown Where Ontario Can Collect $70,000,000

PLAYS POLITICS CLAIM

W. D. Black Nominated to Run "in Frontenac County

Harrowsmith, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP) Challenge of Conservative Leader Earl Rowe to show where Ontario can collect $70,000,000 in succession duties was taken before Premier Mitchell Hepburn today.

"I'll pave barnyard thick," Mr. Rowe told Conservatives at a picnic rally here Saturday. "I'll tell Mr. Hepburn that I'll collect $60,000 from a Liberal he hasn't collected from." In campaign speeches in preparation for Ontario's June 4 election, Mr. Hepburn had declarde his intention of collecting succession duties from delinquent estates.

Mr. Rowe questioned whether any Liberal could be proud of the government's record in regard to the Separate Schools question, first passing then rescinding legislation reapportioning corporation taxes among counties.

"He tricked and disappointed," said the Conservative leader.

"He disappointed one element after he got into power and betrayed the other since then and has lost the confidence of both."

The government, he said, had "the greatest record of racketeering ever known in Canada. Mr. Hepburn promised a square deal for the organized and has broken faith with them. He fired 453 reinstated men from Queen's park with medals on their coats and replaced in 600 grit ward heelers with mud on their faces."

Criticized For Expenditure

He criticized the Premier for cancellation of power contracts with companies, declaring that Mr. Hepburn had piloted the black emblem of repudiation" with a reference to the province's credit. But "he has contracted for 400,000 more horsepower, and unless he contracts for more parts of Ontario will be in darkness by Spring."

"Hepburn played politics with hospitalization and cut down the money used for the aid of Ontario patients," Mr. Rowe charged. Under said. The Premier's opposition to the committee for industrial organization, he declared, was designed to smother the Separate Schools question. Mr. Rowe insisted a man had the right to join any organization as long as he maintained law and order.

The party selected W. D. Black, who has sat in the legislature since 1911 and once was Speaker, to carry the Conservative nomination in Addington County.

WEEKEND DEATHS LISTED AT 13

Strathroy Resident Held as Material Witness as Girl Drowns

(By The Canadian Press)

Marked by numerous non-fatal motor crashes, Ontario produced a week-end fatality list of 13.

Accidental drowning in Departure Lake in Cochrane district, besides several drownings at Sudbury and Ottawa, swelled the list.

Provincial Police at London, arrested Peter Kolic, of Strathroy, after Ada Franks, 21, a native of Strathroy who lived in Toronto, was drowned in a paddle boat in the Thames River off an amusement park. Kolic was held on bail as a material witness. Police said he and Miss Franks were in the boat when it overturned. He was found by friends clinging to the frail craft.

Provincial coroner of five Northern Ontario young people, from 17 to 26, ruled the deaths by drowning in Cochrane district, besides separate drownings at Sudbury and Ottawa, swelled the list.

TRENTON and DISTRICT

Trenton, August 30.—(Special)—Cases of persons seeking relief this winter will be dealt with individually by the council as a whole it was decided after Councillor R. J. Whitely protested against the method of by which the relief cases are being supervised. At the monthly meeting of the council on the week-end, Councillor Whitely voiced, that he was displeased with the manner in which Mayor E. A. Guss handled the relief situation and declared it was time the entire council members had something to say. We have no idea whatsoever of what is going on in the relief department, Mr. Whitely charged and demanded that a motion establishing, that the case of each person who registers for relief shall have to be probed by council in a body. Since 1934 Mayor Guss has been solely in charge of the relief department in Trenton.

Adds Husband Claimed

Mr. Cory claims, that a change in the relief management will cause the loss of an extra employee and another book-keeper will have to be employed to take care of the added book work. Present staff in the municipal office are up to their necks in work, Mr. Cory said, and informed his colleagues that two men were handling the work on some amount of business that seven were doing in the Sheriff's office. Mr. Whitely remarked, that the town-office staff was capable of coping with the extra relief cases that arise out of the relief management alteration. It is expected that the applications will greatly increase from now on. Seemingly satisfied with Mr. Whitely's request, Mayor Cory gave notice that preparations would be made to change the present relief system after September 1. Trenton is about to be refinanced player

Mr. Cory said he knew he had no power to remove more closeted by cooperation.

GOOD MANNERS

by MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Shower Details

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. My sister-in-law and I are planning a bridal shower and we are having invitations printed. Should we use how our names should be listed as hostesses on the invitations? She is married and I am single, and our last names are the same.

2. Is it necessary for us to give a gift?

3. Is it improper to have the gifts opened, as the party is to be held in the daytime?

1. For such an informal kind of party as a shower, it would be vastly better form for you and your sister-in-law to write the shower-invitations in the form of notes. You might each write half, worded something like this:

Dear Mary,

Jane Lawson and I are giving a linen shower for Kay Graham in—Hall, on Tuesday, the first of September, at four o'clock, and we very much want to have you come. Do say you will, and make us happy!

Dearest love from us both.

Affectionately,

If more than your first names would be necessary for identification of the notes, you would sign yours Gloria, and your sister would sign her either Jane Smith, Lawson or Jane Lawson.

The next best form of invitation to use is written-note-invitation is the small shower-card, hand-engraved. You can now buy a very good-looking one, simply and dignified. Printed invitations, while not in such good taste as engraved ones, should be worded as formally as engraved ones, and therefore you and your sister-in-law would, on this kind of invitation, use your formal names. Mrs. Henry Lawson, and Miss Gloria Lawson.

2. Usually the hostess or hostesses do give gifts to the bride at the shower.

3. A shower really isn't a shower unless the gifts are opened at the party . . . that is the real point of this kind of party, and the fact that your shower is being given in a hall wouldn't affect this gala and important detail at all. You do so have the guest of honor open the shower presents at the shower!

ORCHID

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. May I give a girl, whom I've been out with twice, an orchid to wear to a card garden to a dinner and dance? Will one be enough?

2. When is the proper time to give it to her? Should I present it at her home, or after she gets in the car?

Waller.

1. Yes, sir, you may, and it would show you a kind and considerate gentleman. And she will be delighted, of course! One will be enough, if the young lady is petite and if the orchid isn't too large. One is better, and the florist will make the corsage so that one will be slightly under the shoulder strap, the stems twined with white ribbon to protect the gown's delicate fronts. And it is best not to have the florist combine any kind of ferns with the orchids . . . they don't need elaboration at this time.

2. If it is convenient, it is better to send the orchid in the afternoon of the dance. Then you'll be free to be with you, and give it to her at her home. This is more convenient for her than giving it to her after you have entered the car.

Make Sure You Have The Proper Wedding Material Before You Start to Make Over a Man

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm all began by my feeling sorry for him, we were in the same crowd. Although he was good-looking he had such a peculiar disposition that all the girls passed him up, and when I went to dance with him, he talks a great deal about his health, telling me things he ought to keep to himself; then too, he wants to instruct the person he's with about everything.

"My father asked me if he had been associating in the encyclopedia, and if he made sandwiches out of the dictionary. Still, I liked him till he got to boning me. He didn't like the wave in my hair, and persuaded me to have it cut short, to get rid of the permanent. Then he wouldn't let me color my hair, insisting that got pretty mad about the permanent, because it cost me $7.00 for it, and had given it to me for a birthday present.

"He told me one evening that he thought he'd never marry, and he hoped no one would take his attentions seriously. He said that he was fickle by nature and had no intention of marrying and settling.

"Dad is kind of sarcastic, and told him that he was entirely right, and far I was concerned. The next day he called and hasn't been to the house since. And now, Miss Fairfax, mean-spirited as this may seem to you, I miss him awfully and wish he'd come back again.

"Sometimes I think he acts so peculiarly because he's bashful, and doesn't feel sure about what he says and does. He just gets into trouble, like telling Dad he didn't want anyone to take his attentions as a girl seriously.

"Do you think it would be all right if I wrote him a note, saying that I didn't take his attentions seriously and that I hoped we would be always be friends, and would be friend-

SIR WILFRID LAWSON DIES

Cockermouth, Cumberland, Aug. 30.—(CP Cable)—Sir Wilfrid Lawson, 75-year-old "Grand Old Man" of Cumberland sport, collapsed and died Saturday during a village cricket match.

Sir Wilfrid, a former Liberal member of parliament for this North Country Constituency, was master of the Cumberland Fox Hounds for twenty-eight years and took 10 point-to-point races at the age of 73. He was a lifelong teetotaller.

Cornwall, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Ronald J. Gillies, 74, Former Mayor of Cornwall, died here today. Born at Inverness, Scotland, he came to Canada with his parents who settled in Glengarry.

Mr. Gillies was Mayor of Cornwall in 1914.

ACTOR ROYALLY WELCOMED

London, Aug. 30.—(CP Cable)—"I God Almighty had arrived at Waterloo station on Friday the women would not have gone more crazy over him than they did over Robert Taylor," declared Rev. Cecil Clark, vicar of Saint Gabriel's Church, Wanstead, in his sermon yesterday.

He was referring to the hundreds of pushing, screaming women who greeted the motion picture actor on his arrival from the United States.

Alibi Witness

By GEORGE CRONYN

McClure Newspaper Syndicate
WNU Service.

Frank Koonts, alias Kid Holloway, was on trial for murder. He was a rural gangster who had done time for robbery and assault; he was suspected of being one of the trio who had staged the Brierton bank holdup in which the cashier was slain. On a hot July Trooper Gary had gone alone into the Oak Ridge district and was shot from ambush on the road leading into Durham Four Corners.

The crime occurred on Saturday, at exactly 10:05 a.m., the moment when the trooper's watch stopped as he fell again a rock.

Martin Cobb was the star witness for the prosecution. He had been chief of police in Brierton when the crime was committed. He died with buckshot.

Martin Cobb was sworn in; a woodsman, tall, lean, grizzled, clad in blue jumpers and a faded flannel shirt, with keen gray eyes and a dignity that plainly made a favorable impression upon the jury and auditors. He deposed that he was seventy-two, a widower, by trade a sawyer and axe-man. "While the mill was up there, but now mostly cuttin' cord wood for the folks in Brierton, which don't bring in as much." The defense attorney proceeded with the examination of the witness.

"You live alone on Oak Ridge?"

"Yes sir, all alone. My shack is on the road road into the woods."

"Where do you get your mail?"

"In Brierton."

"How often do you go for your mail?"

"Every Saturday morning."

"What time do you leave your house?"

"Reg'lar at eight o'clock. I got a car, 1926 model, but it's mighty runs." The court room tittered. The judge rapped for order.

"What do you do in Brierton?"

"Well, I go to the store and lay in a stock of supplies and chin salt pork and beans, and mebbe a sack of flour. I'm real fond of flour. I look at all the pretty things in the store windows. Then, on Saturday, I get to the 10:15 come in, and back to the post office to get the last mail which is 10:30, and mebbe I stop to open up the Rural Gazette before I start back home."

"On this Saturday, the seventeenth of July, you were in the Brierton post office at 10:30 as usual?"

"Yes sir, as usual."

"Did you—I ask you to watch your answers carefully, Mr. Cobb!—did you at that time see in the post office the prisoner whom you recognize in this court room?"

Martin Cobb's keen eyes scanned the crowded court room; the prisoner sat manacled between two officers, a long arm and, pointing a lean finger, he said accusingly, standing on the heel or the toes. Can't Force Enjoyment On Child

Youngster Should be Permitted to Seek Pleasure Own Way

By LISA GRENELLE

Uncle Felix took small Sam off on a motoring trip to see some race and spend the night, but Sam became disgusted and disgusted. That was the last time he'd ever take Sam along, he said.

"What's the matter, Sam, have badly?".

"Oh, no." Uncle Felix had to admit that small Sam's behavior had been perfect. Sam's mother's child had been bored to death the whole time; didn't really care for motors, didn't want to be interested in racing. He was too young to be taught to like such things. That was a mistake.

But Sam himself could talk of nothing else for weeks but the wonderful trip he had taken with Uncle Felix. To be sure, it wasn't the motoring or the racing that Sam talked about. It was a bull he had seen in a field.

"I went right up to the fence and got my arm through and touched him on the nose. Mummy and he never butted me or anything."

Beauty Seekers Should Keep Eyes Young

By HELEN FOLLETT

Have you an eye for romance, pretty one? Well then, look after your eyes. They attract as much attention.

Keep your eyes young. There are old eyes in young faces—bored, weary, sullen, or stupid eyes. What keeps them young? Sleep, and plenty of it, and the right kind of sleep. Not too much, not too little. Don't rob them. If the rims are red or swollen, use a boric acid eye solution. Don't forget that the setting for your eyes is important, too. The surrounding tissues and smooth skin help flatter your eyes.

If you need glasses, wear them. Don't be silly about that matter. Many people can see better with glasses, but it has a bad effect upon their eyes if they squint and a hypernervous woman is a pest.

When walking, don't come down on the heel or the toes. The weight of the body should be borne by the balls and the ter-bone of the foot. The posture is to be kept and the backbone is not to suffer strain.

Walk with spirit and energy, but don't have a jerky gait. That interferes with poise, which is a grand beauty asset.

Pleasing Voice Asset to Charm

HELEN VALKOS

A pleasing voice adds to her charm.

(By HELEN FOLLETT)

Watch your words—not only what you say, dear girl, but how you use your voice when saying it. Speaking rapidly or sudden changes in pitch strain on the vocal cords; they come together with spasmodic force.

Few voices are unpleasant. They are disagreeable because they are not used correctly. Loud speakers are a case in point. Many shriek and yell at each other. If they had good manners, they wouldn't do it.

What is more offensive than the man or woman who shouts over the phone? Then there are the "cackling" women, and those who twang right along in one tone, like a Hawaiian guitar.

A throaty voice is caused by tension. "I'll all began by my feeling sorry for him, we were in the same crowd. Works Around Farm Even at Age of 102

Liverpool, Col., Aug. 30.—(CP)—Mrs. Margaret Hamilton, who will be 102, in October, is old-fashioned enough to like exercise in the open air, and, modern enough to like motoring. She can still help in the work around her son's farm, near this Perth County town, even to the extent of working in the cornfield.

Scottish born, Mrs. Hamilton was embarrassed by the ban on her arms when a reporter called on her.

"I got a good dose of the sun when I was weeding the corn last month. It stung for a few days but it's all right now," she explained diffidently.

Able to read without glasses, Mrs. Hamilton's greatest solace since her family of 11 scattered has been the Bible.

"There are so many good things in the Bible for the people to read," she said. "If they read it throughout the world, there would not be all these wars and crimes."

LEVINE FORFEITS BAIL
New York, Aug. 30 (AP)—Charles A. Levine, first trans-Atlantic airplane passenger, failed to put in a scheduled appearance in Federal Court today to answer an indictment charging smuggling of tungsten powder from Canada.

Judge John W. Clancy declared his bail of $500 forfeited and granted a motion for a bench warrant.

Government attorneys told the court it was the third time Levine's name had appeared on the calendar for pleading. His attorney said he was stranded in Newfoundland by plane, but that he had been delayed by storms, and would arrive late today.

LINER BOMBED

Shanghai, August 30 (AP)—British naval authorities reported the liner President Hoover was bombed today by four airplanes of undetermined nationality off the Yangtze River, Lightship H. M. S. Cumberland was dispatched to the liner's aid.

The President Hoover, a 21,936-ton American Mail Line and Dollar Lins fleet which has been evacuating foreigners from war-torn Shanghai.

The bombing of the President Hoover occurred while Japanese planes renewed their attack on the Chinese civic centre at Kiangwan, northwest of Shanghai. Several bombs struck near the Kiangwan Race Course.

The liner sent out a request for medical aid shortly after the bombing.

Concentrate Against Chiang

Japan concentrated military and naval forces today for the drive against General Chiang Kai-Shek's troops, holding nearly all Kiangsu Province.

"Japan is preparing for an offensive," the Domei agency said a Japanese army spokesman.

Chinese shore batteries, near the Whangpoo River which skirts Shanghai, bombarded the Japanese hospital ship Asahi Maru carrying Japanese wounded homeward. One Asahi sailor was injured three male nurses, Japanese authorities announced.

They said the ship was marked with the Red Cross insignia on both funnels.

Japanese Reinforcements

The Japanese continued to move large bodies of reinforcements along the Liuho, Lotien and Woosung sector from 12 to 20 miles north of this bomb and shell-swept area along the mouth of estuary of the Yangtze River.

The Japanese also threatened the greater part of their fleet to the Liuho and Pusan-Japan shores in the same sector. The naval guns had the range of the Lion Forest Forts which it was expected the fighting would be heaviest.

The attack was said to have received recently from Japan a large number of howitzers, heavy guns and the caliber has not been disclosed.

It is estimated that of 54,000 Japanese troops who arrived off Kiangsu Province landing points a week ago, about half had come ashore.

254,000 Japanese in China

Foreign observers today said the land island empire has 250,000 soldiers and sailors fighting both in Kiangsu Province and in North China where with another 250,000 are ready to embark.

That Japan has prepared for a hard struggle in China was borne out by the decision of the Tokyo Government to appropriate another 1,500,000,000 yen (about $435,000,000) and to triple the peacetime strength of its fighting forces. The appropriation would bring Japan's war fund to 2,944,000,000 yen (about $592,780,000).

Three hundred non-combatants were killed and several hundred wounded, a Chinese communique said, in a bombing raid on the station district, on the boundary line of the International Settlement and Chinese Chapei. Incendiary bombs set fire to 300 houses.

More than 100 civilians were killed and about 400 wounded in a raid on Nanking on the Chinese statement asserted. One of the Nanking targets was the National School for Orphans.

Sixteen Japanese bombers took a toll of dead or wounded in Nanchang, capital of Kiangsi Province, shortly after noon today, it was reported here. Chinese reports were that an American Mail Line Liner might be was bombed at Nanchang but no Americans were among the victims.

AWAIT APOLOGY

"The note will be approved by the public as just," the Times said, "and it is to be hoped that it will be asked for less in satisfaction for [illegible] outrage. . . to be presented stiffer demands would have been to allow the well-justified comment to outrun reason."

No Mistaking Meaning

Lord Beaverbrook's Daily Express said the note was "written in moderate language that will not be mistaken on that account." Noting that the government had asked for a formal apology, the Morning Post declared "it is surprising that they have not specifically asked how than to ask at all for what might so properly have been forthcoming spontaneously and immediately."

The Manchester Guardian commented that "international law and custom are to Japan, not an obligation but a convenience."

Says Note Moderate

The News-Chronicle, Liberal organ said "the British note was well-phrased, firm, but it leaves room for quibbling."

The note pointed that the British government, while resentful of the attacks on the Ambassador, was more gravely disturbed by the attacks on non-combatants. It said:

"His Majesty's government feel they must take this opportunity to emphasize the wider significance of this event. It is an outstanding example of results to be expected from indiscriminate attack from the air.

Inhumanity Expressed

"Such events are inseparable from the practice, as unlikely as it is inhuman, of failing to draw that clear distinction between combatants and noncombatants in the conduct of hostilities, which international law, no less than the conscience of mankind, has always enjoined.

"The fact that in the present case no actual state of war has been declared or expressly recognized by either party to exist emphasizes the intolerable nature of what has occurred."

It was expected Japan would meet the terms of the note and thus close the incident. But in the case there was no hint of further action should Japan decide not to proffer the expected apology.

The note revealed a nickel-steel bullet had penetrated the abdomen and grazed the spine of the Ambassador. It stated each of the two cars of the envoy's party was flying a Union Jack at the time of the attack. And that no Chinese troops were in the vicinity.

No indemnity was demanded, informed sources declaring the issues involved were too grave for such a matter to be made a question of money.

INJURED REMOVED BY AMBULANCE AFTER STEEL PLANT RIOT

Three of the eleven men injured during a strike riot at the Hepperstall Steel Company Steel plant, at Pittsburg, Pa., are pictured through the window of the ambulance that removed them from the scene of the riot, to the hospital. One of the three ducks the camera and tries to cover up a battered companion. The riot followed an attempt by C. W. Company Steel plant, at Pittsburg, owner and 14 others, to enter the building.

Hypodermic Case And Narcotics Stolen

Cobourg, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Narcotics and a case containing hypodermics were stolen Saturday from the office of Dr. W. Wade while the doctor was at his supper. A man called at the doctor's office complaining of an aching tooth. He was admitted by the maid who asked him to wait until the doctor had eaten.

Dr. Wade told the visitor to see a dentist and after the man had left, noticed his medical kit had been rummaged and the narcotic case stolen. Value of the drugs stolen was about $15.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Thirteen search parties in an effort to locate the body of Hugo Hillstrom, who fell overboard from a scow off Sand Island in a heavy fog Saturday. Hillstrom was one of a party on the way to start building operations on a new power house at Montreal River.

Cannifton Athletics Down Napanee Bees In First Game Of Intermediate 'C' Playoffs

Score is 13-7 With Ernie Smith Being Scored on in Two Innings

2 HURLERS SHELLED

Boona, Barrage And Sinfield Heavy Hitters For Cannifton

While Ernie Smith was pitching seven hit ball and keeping the Napanee Bees off the scoring, shelling seven of the nine frames, the Cannifton Athletics were on a batting spree to shell two Napanee hurlers from the mound and pound out a '13 to 7' victory over the Bees in the first game of the initial round of the intermediate "C" series in the O.B.A.A. played at the Belleville Fair Grounds on Saturday.

Although the Bees garnered in two counters in the opening half of the initial frame, the Cannifton lads came back to score five and added subsequent scoring in every other inning, except the second, seventh and eighth. Cannifton nine touched a trio of Napanee moundsmen for a total of 15 safeties, including many extra base blows, while limited the visitors to seven hits.

Sinfield Hits Homer

Moens, Barrage and Sinfield wielded potent bats for the victors Sinfield blasting a homer to deep right in the first inning with Moens and the McCutcheon brothers, used as punch hitters in the eighth, were the most effective offensively for the locals. Smith whiffed eight to his opponents' three, but walked five as the Napanee moundsmen passed three. Bees were shelled from the mound in the fourth, while Garrison was derricked for a pinch hitter in the eighth. The Athletics played good ball behind Smith, completing the only double play of the game.

Trailing 13 to 2 in the eighth, the Bees staged a desperate last eighth inning rally to score five runs on four hits and a brace of hobbles. Moens had a perfect day at bat with four for four, Barrage and Sinfield collecting three each and E. Jarrell two. Sweet was the only Napanee hobo to collect more than one safe hit off the deliveries of Smith. The second game of the series will be played in Napanee on Wednesday.

Sports Roundup

By EDDIE BRIETZ
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Aug. 30.—(AP)—Many people think Mickey Cochrane will give up the reins at Detroit after this year and that Tony Lazzeri of the Yankees will succeed him instead of going to Cleveland.

Mike Jacobs was only looking when he offered Max Schmeling 13 1-2 per cent of the gate to fight the Brown Bomber without title in October.....Mike knows that show would fill his "carnival of champions" billed for September 29.....Mike he knows Max isn't interested in 12 1-2 per cent.....Lou Gehrig, Cincinnati Reds first baseman, Barrage 2, Cole in this country this year it will be Philadelphia or the Chicago.....A better bet is, the fight will go over to next June with Max Schmeling getting at least 40 per cent of the gate.....Paste that one in your hats.

If Parr beats Louis tonight, just listen to that limb crash with all the fight writers aboard.....Abe Simon, Detroit saildown of Tommy Farr was on the level.

Baron Gottfried Von Cramm, who has played 'em all, rates Don Budge better than Perry any day in the week, but says Perry thinks he could make 'em all look bad.....Those 5 to 1 odds on Louis and Parr will sear by ring time.....You can bet on that.....Bookmaker's say less than $10,000 of Farr money has been laid on the line in New York.

CROWN VACANT IN WOMEN'S OPEN

Not Single Former Open Champion in The Tournament

Winnipeg, Aug. 30 (CP)—Thirty-nine women golfers found the throne-room vacant today as they teed off for the 18-hole qualifying round of the Canadian women's open tournament over the 6th Charles Country club course here.

Mrs. A. B. Darling, who won the title last year in her home city, Montreal, is not competing and is not a single champion is included in the field.

Although the entry list includes representatives of every province except Saskatchewan and the Maritimes, no outstanding favorite has appeared. Mrs. H. S. Robertson of Toronto, formerly of Timmins was a last minute entry.

One of the most dangerous contenders is Beatrice Barrett of Minneapolis, Minnesota State champion and Iona United States entrant.

Rated high among Canadian stars are the Ontario champion, Mrs. Rita Shuttleworth of Hamilton, and Mrs. Ross Gooderham, Montreal's Kanawaki Club, Kaye Parsons, Vancouver, and the 19-year-old Manitoba titleholder, Heather Leslie of Winnipeg.

HOCKEY ASSOCIATIONS REACH AGREEMENT ON IMPORTING PLAYERS

Baltimore, Aug. 30 (AP)—Officials of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and of the Eastern Hockey League have reached an agreement banning for one year border "raids" for Canadian players. The ruling, aimed at E.H.L. teams is almost entirely Canadian.

The agreement, out of which the officials expressed hope would come a permanent working agreement between Canadian Eastern League clubs, was the club secretary-treasurer Sunday after a two-day discussion.

It provides:

1. That only one player may be taken from any Canadian team unless that team agrees for more than one to leave.

2. That the Eastern League be limited to 12 Canadian players exclusive of replacements.

3. That the Eastern League submit not later than Sept. 15 a list containing the names of players with whom they intend to be affiliated, and that no player not on this list can be used.

4. That the Eastern League make its final selection of players not later than Nov. 15.

Special Exemption

A special exemption was made in the case of the Baltimore Orioles, of the Eastern League. The Orioles already have provided a training camp at Hamilton, Ont., with 20 new players, besides last year's veterans under Coach Gordy Bennett.

The agreement with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association the Eastern Hockey League completely free of government by the United States Amateur Athletic Union. The league broke with the A.A.U. last year, when Eddie Powers was banned in an eligibility mix-up.

Cecil Duncan, vice president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association; George S. Mithoff, Baltimore, vice-President of the Eastern League, and Secretary-Treasurer Hegarty, were the Canadians present.

TENNIS

The Belleville netters from the Bay of Quinte district, took took two out of a possible three points from their Trenton rivals in the finals of the semi-finals played on the Bay of Quinte Tennis conference courts at the Belleville Fair grounds yesterday. The remaining two men's doubles and men's and ma's singles will be played some time with the winner of this round meeting Campbellford in the group finals, commencing Wednesday.

Belleville's victories were in the ladies' doubles—Esther Moncrieff and Marion MacLean; Belleville, defeated Dorothy Hamilton and Margaret Bowne, Trenton, 6-4, 1-6, 6-4.

In the first men's doubles Bud Odell and Cliff Bateman, both Belleville, triumphed over Ewen Cook and Larry Goulet in straight sets 6-3 and 6-1.

In the mixed doubles, however, Trenton was victorious as Peg Fillon and Jack McCarthy, Trenton, won over Grace McCreery and Art Cole, Belleville, after extra play by the scores of 7-5 and 6-4.

Of the two remaining sets the Belleville club must win one to eliminate Trenton and qualify for the finals versus Campbellford.

Nickel World Series Looming As Giants Break Down Lead Of Chicago Cubs to Half Game

A's Put Two Records in Book by Scoring 12 Runs in Frame

YANKS MOVE ON

Defeat Second Place Tigers to Hold Margin f 12½ Games

By SID FEDER
Associated Press Sports Writer

Get your nickels ready folks. It looks like another subway series.

What with one thing and another, those galloping Giants seemed headed today for another of their stretch miracles, such as wound up with the pennant in 1934 and gave little old New York a world series monopoly.

From the wreckage of a week-end of walloping, it was Bill Terry's Terriers all but overhaul the Cubs in the National League pennant parade, and the western half of the junior program. Take a look at some of those:

Connie Mack's athletics, for whom rest and quiet should be prescribed after the biting around they've taken all season, turned in one of the year's clubbing masterpieces against the White Sox. They socked 12 runs in the first inning. Six of them batted in by Bob Johnson, for a pair of American League records as they took the opener of a doubleheader 16-0. The Sox slipped in with the nightcap 2-1.

The A's equally unpredictable opponents, the Detroit Tigers, dropped a five-game winning streak against first division outfits, by banging the Cubs around 10-3 in their opener, with a barrage of 17 hits, and still held sixth place despite a 2-1 setback in the nightcap.

The daffy Dodgers, believe it or not, pounded Pittsburg's pitiful Pirates in both ends of a twin bill, 5-2 and 6-4, and climbed out of the cellar behind Leroy's cellar, with the Reds dropping in.

Allows Only One Hit

Ray Harrell, an up and downer who hasn't been much help to the Cardinals this season, just missed a no-hitter in the nightcap in their inning single as he pitched the Gas House Gang to a 9-0 win over Boston Bees in their double bill nightcap, after the Bees took the opener 3-2.

Bob Feller allowed only four hits and still lost the ball game to the five-hit pitching of young Harold Chase, whose unexpected ability gave the Senators a 6-2 decision over the Indians. After the Chase clubbed out an 8 edge in their first game.

If the Giants who have been fortunate in getting a combination of timely hitting and effective pitching of their own, and obliging, nosedives on the part of their strongest rivals, are certain of their crown as the Yanks are of the American League's laurels, things would be simple. The Yanks moved 12 1-2 games in front yesterday with a 7-4 edge over the Tigers as Lou Gehrig clouted number 29, and Red Ruffing pitched victory number 17.

Buck Newsom turned in a four-hitter to give the Red Sox a 2-0 win over the Browns in the opener of a doubleheader, and the Brownies belted three other guys 8-3 in the nightcap.

DOORMAN KILLED AND CITY ROCKED BY BLAST

Detroit, Aug. 30 (CP)—A doorman at the Club Ten Forty was killed yesterday and downtown Detroit rocked when an automobile belonging to Harry Milligan, alleged by police to be a former member of the Purple Gang here, was dynamited on a parking lot. Milligan, eye-witness to the explosion, was waiting for the doorman at the Club to bring him his car when the blast came.

The man killed was William Nelson, 30, Detroit negro.

Two sticks of dynamite, wedged in the car's motor, exploded when Nelson turned on the ignition. police ballistics experts said after examining the wreckage. Windows of the car was strewn about the parking lot and on top of nearby buildings. Every window on the side of a building adjoining the parking lot was shattered.

JACOBS IS HOPING GOOD FAIRIES WILL PROTECT JOE LOUIS

By GAYLE TALBOT

New York, Aug. 30—(AP)— The good fairies, if any, that flit about and protect the boxing game from violent harm have a job ahead of them tonight at the Yankee Stadium, where Jimmy Braddock's alcoide doesn't think he smells rain clouds.

The game's little Pinkertons will need to be in sound shape, able to travel 15 rounds at a fast clip and to protect themselves at all times. Tommy Farr, the visiting problem child, is supposed to fight Champion Joe Louis tonight, and the little fellows had better be in there slugging or they ain't any more money. They are able to earn their keep.

Nobody wants the Welshman to get hurt—not seriously. Even Mike Jacobs would be willing to settle for a nice, comfortable Louis victory on points. But everybody seems agreed that Farr is a tough customer, and the fairies will have their hands full.

Most Ticket For Jacobs

Although he has the Welshman under contract, Jacobs has nothing booth, win or lose, Jacobs has been inclined to blame judging at his mere suggestion that Farr might win. Joe Louis, as champion, is a real ticket seller, but Farr, who has only just begun to punch.

Mr. Jacobs is probably expecting a crowd of 40,000 and a $400,000 gate tonight since new customers keep coming right along after last Thursday's postponement. That's the figure.

The fact is I odds that Louis will retain his newly-won crown tonight reflect the young Britisher's present popularity almost equally with the public's faith in the terrific punch that carried him to the top.

PLAYOFFS CALL THE RED WINGS

Getting Good Pitching And Timely Hitting in Late Season

By the Associated Press

Call of the play-offs is luring Rochester Red Wings into their best form of the International League season and a powerful combination of both fine pitching and timely hitting is enabling them to defeat Buffalo and Baltimore for a post in the finals.

Wings turned in one of their best performances of the season yesterday Toronto Maple Leafs in both ends of a double bill yesterday, 8-2, and Judd Lee limited the Leafs to five scattered safeties, did the hurling job while allowing four hits and Walker seven.

Rochester held on to second place Montreal Royals downed Buffalo Bisons twice, 12-8, 2-0. Paul Dean, Jeffries and Sankey collected three hits apiece in the opener as Marvin Duke registered his 16th victory of the season.

Newark bears showed the rest of the league just how it is done when they trimmed Jersey City Giants, 9-0, behind five-hit hurling by Vito Tamulis. It was the stocky left-hander's 20th consecutive victory and his 17th of the season.

Baltimore Orioles kept pace with Rochester by trimming Syracuse Chiefs in a night double bill 5-3, 8-3. Manager Bucky Crouse's club won behind Dusty Rhodes in the opener and then hit five Chief hurlers to take the second game.

AS 1ST CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION OPENED ITS GATES

With the official opening scheduled for later in the day, these members of the Canadian National Exhibition troupe, each with his own particular job to fill in making the big exhibition a success, prepared to welcome opening day crowds to the permanent exhibition city in Toronto. At right is the ever popular Tom Mix, undying hero of many an old cowboy film, who this year brings his own rodeo and circus to the National Exhibition; with him is one of his "brains," The pachyderms at top and the colored tent-pegger having his morning shave below, were caught by the photographer as, with the job of getting the midway ready completed, they cleaned up for opening performances.

SWIMMERS COMPETING FOR WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP AND POT O' GOLD

Warmer water than at any time since the event started is expected to be in evidence for Men's Ten-Mile Open Race for the swimming championship of the world which takes place on Tuesday, August 31 in Lake Ontario in front of the Canadian National Exhibition Grounds at Toronto. For several weeks the water temperature has ranged around 70 degrees, but a change in the direction of the wind may easily bring about a change within a few hours. It is expected that between 75 and 80 men will face the starter, and most of those shown in our picture should be well up to the front. (1) Frank Pritchard of Buffalo, winner of last year's race, and favored by many to repeat; (2) "Tiger" Cleghorn, a seasoned campaigner from Ottawa, who has competed before but never has been in the money; (3) Bill Nolan of Chatham, Mass., who finished sixth last year as the race has been lengthened to 10 miles. (4) Harry Heskeith of Montreal, said to be one of the most proficient swimmers ever to have entered the big swim from that city; (7) Wilson Padgett of Marion, Ark., sixth in 1936 but forced out in 1936 owing to illness, he should make a good showing this year; (8) Johnny Cairo of Toronto should stand a fine chance if the water is cold, but he may not be able to keep up with the leaders if the water plays warm.

JAPANESE AVIATORS BOMB AND WRECK CHINESE BARRACKS IN NORTH KEN CHINA

A target for Japanese aeroplanes in North China, the Shihsia barracks of the Chinese army are shown (above) after the Japanese aviators had dropped bombs on the buildings. That Nippon's fliers are excellent marksmen, is shown by the wreckage. Scenes like that shown are becoming familiar sights at Shanghai as fighting between the Chinese and Japanese continues with both sides using heavy artillery effectively.

CAMPBELL LAUNCHES NEW BOAT HE HOPES WILL CAPTURE WATER RECORD

ALLEGED MURDERER DIES IN HOTEL FIRE AFTER KILLING

After a search of the bush near Parry Sound, Ont., failed to reveal any trace of William Hamilton, Parry Sound butcher, who is alleged to have murdered Mrs. George Buck of Toronto, police officers found the charred body of the alleged murderer in the ruins of the summer hotel to which he set fire. The photograph (above) shows the hotel totally destroyed. Hamilton is said to have stabbed Mrs. Buck with a huge knife when she told him the woman proprietor of the hotel was away. Hamilton forced his way into the building and brutally stabbed the Toronto woman, who was on her holidays, before setting fire to the dwelling. The woman proprietor of the hotel and her daughter, escaped possible death when they rowed out into Sis Mile Lake on which the hotel was situated.

ON LECTURE TOUR

The Bishop of Bradford the Right Rev. A. W. F. Blunt, is pictured on the S.S. Duchess of Richmond when he arrived at Quebec to begin a lecture tour in Canada and the United States. It was the bishop's declaration that "the King is in need of God's grace" that brought into the open opposition to King Edward VIII and led to his abdication. He said he took the risk of making the declaration "because of the danger silence was doing to the crown and empire." The bishop denied his tour had any sort of a parallel to the recent tour of the United States made by the Rev. R. Anderson Jardine, who officiated at the wedding of the former ruler and Mrs. Wallis Simpson.

TOURING ENGLISH CRICKET TEAM SHOW STAR NOTE IN B. C.

The Marylebone Cricket Club of England, which has been touring Canada, stopped off in Vancouver, B.C., for a few exhibition matches. The visiting team's batsmen showed their strength in matches against Vancouver teams, winning both contests on the coast with several wickets to spare. In their match against the British Columbia Colts, a group of promising young players, the tourists batted out 196 for seven wickets and dismissed the Vancouver side with a total of 163 runs. K. A. Cellar, seen in action here, led the English team's attack with 70 runs.

MISSING GIRL

By Maryse Rutledge

"I'm your friend," he said. "I'm her friend, too. But I'm your friend first." Bertram smashed Jane had said to him that night, crushing out the grass, pulling her halfway to. "I'm talkin' you, Bertram. Don't you make a sign of no trespassin' anywhere, and you're right on the ground, Wrankin' what you can't have. Am I correct?" He hand fumbled for her clumsily as she rose with a quick gasp, green eye very bright. With an amazing rapidity bits of pastry, into his chair. Jane Tony was just restless and reckless enough to do such a thing. The No Trespassing clue gave it to her when she thought of other things that had happened.

"Look here—" Hall sobered, Bertram tried to his feet with a cock-eyed. Talkin' to?..."

Lorna's smile was like a pat on the back. "Pay the bill like a lamb and come!" I want to telephone."

"She'd be late, and—her mother half wild. Never mind. In the smothering books she sat for a moment, tapping her foot. She had it with the hands now, as she managed well. The night on Tony's balcony came back to her. This girl was there, hysterical, crying out, "Why don't you tell her you're sorry?" Why don't you tell her? All this talk now of Paris and driving. Just camouflage.

"Oh my!" Lorna breathed softly. But nothing would save her if Tony heard the truth about herself and Henri in Paule. Complete disaster then. Her father in the throes of bankruptcy—hills everywhere. The edges crumbling.

Lorna called. Bertram's footsteps went there. She called his club. In the office of the hotel, under her skin grew paler.

He was at the Union. "Tony, I've got to, see you alone before the party."

"Anything happened?"

"Have you seen your wife?"

"Oh." He was a door shutting. "I'm meeting her at your place. Dressing at the club. Why?"

Lorna relaxed against the telephone. What luck! "Come early, then. We'll have time talk, darling—before you see her."

CHAPTER XVII.

THE STORM BREAKS

Lorna strained forward in the low, rainy Lancia, beside Bertram Cotton, speeding back to Trouville. She was going to be inescapably late for her own party, but for her there were far more vital issues at stake. If that wretched little girl got to Tony first and told him what she had discovered in the Combs la Paule, Lorna would be all off—everything that Lorna had built upon, the marriage that would save her from ruinous debts. That is, unless she could discredit the girl in what had seemed was only a gold and white figurehead posing as Mrs. Anthony Kaye. For this information she could thank Bertram and the liquor that had loosened his tongue.

Lorna clenched her hands in her lap as the country blurred by. She had been too sure of Tony. Played him too hard. It was like him to do what no one else would have dared, picking up a strange, tricky girl without background or name and deliberately using her to punish and tantalize Lorna, knowing all the time that he could. Oh, but she would get even with him later for this, as she had with Henri in Paule for dreaming that he could shove her over, even then, when she thought of his pale blue eyes that still had such power over her senses.

Bertram drove like a fool. Cool, cured, as he admitted. Showing off his new car. Wasn't he to spend the night at the Howland house after he party? Quite a smart boy he'd become, running with the right people. Not that dimly his conscience reproached him for having given, even half of Jane's comfort once away. Oh well, he'd said nothing of the garage in Trouville.

"For Heaven's sake, slow down! There's a motor cop after us!" The bright red blur of Lorna's hair brushed his shoulder, even in her nervous state, she jolted his arm. A mammoth van rumbled toward them on the winding road, followed by a Ford.

None too steadily Bertram dragged at the brakes, and veered to the right. The fender of his beautiful new car smashed against a tree, and tilted perilously over a ditch. There was a shriek of a motorcycle droned louder. They were in for it. Well, they might easily have been killed.

Bertram's florid color blotched and clammy, he argued with the cop and the van driver, who presently stood disgusted as he wasn't intoxicated. No, he had not been going beyond 40—possibly 45.

Frantic at the delay, Lorna explained the situation to her high young voice that even grew desperately appealing. The cop knew Miss Howland of Trouville Park, he was a good-looking cop, and Lorna had sometimes waved to him as she drove to town in he, red-setter. The driver of the van was Irish with a feeling for red hair. He offered to tug the Lancia back on the road if the cop would have a heart and let the lady go. Sulkily Bertram pocketed a generous scowling at the damage to his car. And at last they were allowed to proceed on their way at a disgusted 40.

But precious moments had been lost. By the time they reached the rambling old Howland house in the Park, overlooking the lake, the first guests were arriving for the last dinner preceding the dance. On the lawn, strung with lanterns, a marquee had been put up, and on the wide porch banked with greens and flowers, small tables were ready for the thirty dinner guests.

Not a sign of Tony Kaye, who, restless and bored in the disturbed atmosphere prior to Lorna's arrival, had wandered off for a cigarette in the small formal garden. His daughter's hasty words, Lorna's urgent message to his club. He should have gone back to Kayestone for the girl he was forced to present this evening as his wife. And what a mess that was!

Lorna ran past her small, flittering mother and her lean, grey father, whose Old Monitor scrolled 65 years of harnessed worry to an extravagant wife and spendthrift daughter. This party had seemed a crowning folly, complicated by the strain of Lorna's unexplained absence. Now that she had got back she could be lightly breezy, ask questions and exclamations. Moreover, the smash on the gravel of cars driving up, and a pitter-pat voices filled the air with reminders that no matter if her future were wrecked, the show must go on. Left behind her, she dove into the hall mirror, where Tony was certain to hear all about the accident that had delayed her.

"Where's Tony?" she asked tensely of her mother. "He came early. Didn't he? In his wife here yet?"

Mrs. Howland's harassed frown deepened. "He was here a while ago. No; I think it very odd he came without Mrs. Kaye. For Heaven's sake, child, go and dress. She pushed Lorna toward the stairs.

There was nothing she could do. Lorna dashed to her room, her heart wildly beating. It had led a sobered Bertram with his suitcase to a guest room.

"Get me a pint of champagne—quick," Lorna ordered her flustered maid. At least Tony's supposed wife hadn't arrived yet with the tales she could tell of their daughter's shrill and la Paule. If she could only whisper one word to Tony alone! Tell him—Lorna's mind whirled! She knew now he was free to marry her tomorrow if Tony had been told about her. Well, then, why worry! Only anything to get right away, on the score of jealousy. La Paule would never allow the only proof—the clock—to get out of its sight. No, die. He would have to protect himself, too.

Lorna flashed into her bath. Electric fingers of her hair—and touched her lips to ripe crimson. She sprayed light, subtle perfume on the green brocade—cut so daringly low, that she had no intention of paying for. The Principessa Tabarino would contemptuously slip that account on the Kaye bill.

The pint bottle was on a tray by her dressing table where the maid had left it. Thirstily, Lorna drank the bead sparkling wine. Nothing like champagne when you were tired or worried. For a moment it rested her to a reckless brilliance, reflected in her cheval glass. She had no illusions. If ever Tony heard of her affairs with a Paule, the Kaye banker would break her like a bit of rotten kindling until her bones flew.

Downstairs, and still no sign of Tony! Dark figure, Lorna, with increasing panic, wanted to find. Then the winding currents of social duties took her up, carried her along.

Restraint, ruddy and eager, showed after her. Yes, they'd had a bit of a smash-up, going about Ti. Brand new car—wa' a Lancia wasn't so bad. Money meant nothing to these people, he thought. Have to wire his mother for more funds tomorrow. The poor old girl would be pleased when she heard he was right in with the Park Avenue crowd.

"Hello—Lo—Hel—lo—" I'm starved. When do we eat, darling?"

"May I speak to you a moment, Lorna? You've put me next to that Armstrong bore at dinner, and I really—" Lorna, your mother says

Handy clapping to trays of cocktails. Round and round. Lorna chained, glasses and cigarettes, her cheeks flushed. Her house seemed a trap, all these people leering her from that one essential moment since with Tony.

Mrs. Howland whispered: "I can't think where the Kaye are. Frightfully rude of them. We'll have to start dinner."

"No wait, mother." Unconsciously Lorna reached for another martini.

Tony and Jane stood in the shadows of the lawn. As he had promised, at nine on the spot, he had been at the dance waiting for Davis to drive her up to the house. In the enchanting pale yellow gown the Princess Tabarino called, her "Young spring moon" model, and the pearls Tony had given her, she gleamed pale and remote, her wide set eyes twilight were the deeper blue of certain twilights and very still in their circle of black lashes. The hand she gave him as he helped her from the car was icy cold.

Tony's quick, critical gaze approved. Then look at her more closely. He saw that something was very wrong. She was trembling.

"Shall we wait a moment before going in?" he suggested, and led her around to the lower stretch of lawn. Beyond, the Tuxedo lake spread glassy, low, rimmed with pale shingled Howland house glittered lights, with voices and laughter snatched from a drift of flowers.

Jane stood breathing unevenly. Getting back from town and dressing had been a mechanical performance, with a sense of numbness still upon her, but during the drive from Kayestone the afternoon had flashed back vividly, horribly. She heard again la Paule's impassioned appeal when she had accused him of being false, and the cruel lie Lorna's violence still beat upon her ears.

"You're ill, my dear," Tony was saying quite gently. "She anything happened?"

"I'll be all right." Jane stood straighter beside the spread of his shoulders. She mustn't tell him now. And would he believe such ugliness about Lorna? Then there was la Paule's tall veiled threat. "I trust to your discretion, as you must trust to mine." He had said before she left the studio. He had raised scandal for scandal. The portrait of her as Jane Carey against Lorna's reputation which, for his own sake he must protect.

"Did anything happen at la Paule's this afternoon?" Tony's voice hardened. His hand small"pacing Lorna! Jane turned away, her hand at the smooth, serene pearls. "Please don't—don't ask me now," she said faintly. "It's most go in."

Tony took her arm, his gray eyes boring down at her. "I shall insist on knowing later what all this is about," he said coldly. "Pull yourself together. It's the last time I'll ask anything of you."

His anger returned as he remembered that she had gone to that fellow's studio against his expressed wishes.

TORONTO STOCKS

New York, Aug. 30 (AP)—Selected stocks negotiated a modest comeback in today's market.

With steels, rails and specialities in the lead, gains ran to a point or so at the last. Profit-selling occasionally interrupted the sluggish move and reluctant advances were under their tops near the final hours.

Transfers were around 450,000 shares.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Aug. 30 (CP)—Prices were pushed to new records to the smallest volume of the year today and the closing was strong, when about 250,000 shares changed hands and the bulk of this was in the secondary and junior golds. Lake Shore moved in considerable volume with the price holding firm at 51.

Eldorado featured the afternoon trade with an advance of 20 cents to 2.77. The other silvers were quiet and steady. A majority of the active base metals perked up, led by Noranda which firmed nearly two points to 61. International Nickel and Hudson Bay had minor fractions to the good at the close and Consolidated Mining and Smelting was off a bit.

Active golds selling firmer prices included Pickle Crow, Dome, Malartic, Jellicoe, McKenzie, Bidgood-Kirkland, Central Patricia, Uchi, Sladen and Sisco. Little Long Lac added 25 cents and Buffalo-Ankerite was down 1-4.

Brazilian Traction tightened up to 25 1-4, holding a fractional gain at the close.

C. N. R. EARNINGS ON UPWARD TREND

Ottawa Boys' Band To Give Concert Here

Will Play Special Program at Fair Grounds Wednesday

One of the most outstanding musical treats ever provided for a Belleville audience will feature the band program on Wednesday when the Ottawa Boys' Band, one of the most outstanding musical organizations in Canada will pause here enroute to the Canadian National Exhibition. Players believe it is a concert that should be long remembered by music lovers of the city and district.

Composed of boys residing in Ottawa and district, the band has earned a reputation of being one of the best musical organizations of its kind in Canada. Playing over radio stations for the past few months the band had already earned for itself an enviable name in musical circles.

On Wednesday this famous band will be met by Lieut. Fred Johnson of the Belleville and Quinte Hills Municipal Band and be escorted into the centre of Victoria Avenue and Front Street to the Fair Grounds where they will play a half varied program in the bandstand. Immediately following the concert the Ottawa Band will proceed to Toronto and the Exhibition where on Thursday they will combine with other bands for Dominion honors.

Seventy-five instruments played by youthful artists nearly all of them are boys, will be in their crisp right will blend and harmonize in a hundred different ways together through the magical medium of their conductor's baton. Versatile to the nth degree, the band will offer selections and excerpts from the masters in a manner worthy of the outstanding bands of the continent. It will be a musical treat that lovers of melody of the city and district cannot afford to miss.

Situation at Brantford

Brantford, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)— Although four infantile paralysis victims are being treated here, schools will be opened on Sept. 7 as scheduled, Dr. W. H. Hutton, M.O.H., stated today. The children would be as safe at school, especially since there is added medical inspection and nursing staffs, as they would be if allowed to play in groups away from school.

Fort Erie, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)— Third case of infantile paralysis was reported here today, Dr. Albert Collins, M.O.H., said. The latest case was a child one and added adequate quarantine measures have been taken. Schools will re-open Wednesday as scheduled.

12th Birthday Is Iron Day

Toronto, Aug. 30 (CP)—Little Joyce McKenzie is celebrating her 12th birthday here today in the "iron lung" which has kept her alive for the past eight days.

The cheerful little red-head is being shown birthday cards and presents by her nurses and doctors and enjoying her "iron" mail. Late today she expects to be visited by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wesley McKerther, who are now on of Queensland, Australia, after a tour through the glass partition of the ward.

H. McNAMARA DIES IN PERU

One of Three Brothers Who Played Pro. Hockey in Canada

Montreal, Aug. 30 (CP)—Joseph Harold McNamara; 50, one of Canada's best professional hockey players more than two decades ago, died Saturday at Lima, Peru, according to word received by his family here. He had been engaged in construction work in Lima for two years.

He was one of the three McNamara brothers who made names for themselves with Montreal Shamrocks and Renfrew Millionaires, playing with such men as Lester and Frank Patrick, Art Ross, Newsy Lalonde and Cyclone Taylor.

A native of Pembroke, Ont., he jumped to professional hockey at the age of 18. Before ending his career, he played with Sault Ste. Marie, Calumet Mich., Cobalt and Waterloo besides the major league teams.

He is survived by his widow, a son Harold, and two daughters. His hockey-playing brothers, George and Howard, and two sisters, Miss Ethel McNamara and Mrs. Arthur Gendron, live in Toronto.

Two Boys Catch Bass With Roast Pork Bait

Necessity may be the mother of invention, but when you garnish the finished product, it is supposed to be a hastily improvised fishing line, with pieces of succulent roast pork, will—the fish just can't help but bite. And the bass which inhabit Lake Ontario have a distinct partiality to ham when it is roasted, at least in the opinion of Bobby Boyce, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Boyce, of the city.

Finding a couple of fish-hooks in the car in which they journeyed to the Bay of Quinte, Bobby and his friend, Don. Cherry, immediately decided to go fishing. Some old wrapping twine served as lines and after the hooks were fastened to them, the youngsters secured pieces of roast pork for bait.

Armed with their impromptu fishing tackle the young Izaak Waltons proceeded to the edge of the lake and dropped their lines in the water. The thrill of two young fishers was experienced for the first time later when Bobby hauled in a beauty weighing three pounds one and one-half pounds, while Don. had consisted of a one-pound green bass.

Night Blooming Cereus Plant Attracts Large Crowds of Visitors

Visitors from all parts of the city gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Hammell, 221 John Street, on Saturday evening, when their "night blooming cereus plant" opened its flowers for the eight years. The plant known botanically as "cereus grandiflora", is a well-known member of the cactus family, and most of the year it presents a rather ordinary, unattractive appearance. On the night when the flowers unfold, the plant is an object of exquisite beauty, as the flowers, which are held upheld by the loveliness of its flower and the fragrance of its perfume.

The plant grows from a slip, takes seven years to produce flowers and then blooms annually. The flower stem comes from one of the pricks in the long leaf, and when the bud begins to develop, like object, for about two weeks, it grows 1 inch in day to open.

On Saturday night about seven o'clock, the bud began its process of unfolding. Waxen petals, imperceptibly moved from the centre, one by one, until by eight o'clock the flower was revealed in all its loveliness. The flower was ten inches in diameter when blossoms were centred with filaments in an odd formation, making a beautiful picture. Then the over-an hour, the full beauty of the blossom was revealed, and it began to droop. By morning it had completely withered and the cereus plant's moment of beauty was over until another blossom appears.

The plant is being carefully tended by its owners, and escaped injury during the bitterly cold winters. Although it is customary for a bud to appear after seven years, Mr. and Mrs. Hammell had to wait another year for the first blossom. Many buds now promise a similar blossoming within several weeks.

The plant is kept on the verandah of the Hammell home, and on Saturday night an electric bulb illuminated the flower to enable the visitors and neighbors who flocked to watch it, a better view.

Obituary

LATE MRS AGNES DONOGHUE

The funeral of Miss Agnes Donoghue took place this Monday morning, from the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Donoghue, 161 William Street, to St. Michael's Church. The Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson, V.G. met the body at the entrance to the church and Requiem Mass was celebrated by the Rev. Michael Ryan, cousin of the deceased, of Dixie, Ont. The Rev. Gregory Kelly, rector of St. Michael's Cathedral, Toronto, was present in the Sanctuary.

At the offertory Mr. John Fahey sang "Pray For the Dead", and at the end of Mass Mr. Harold Barnett sang "Nearer My God to Thee".

The funeral was very largely attended and there were many spiritual offerings and a wealth of floral tributes. Members of the Sodality of the Rosary formed a guard of honor.

Interment was made in St. Michael's Cemetery, the Rt. Rev. Monsignor Nicholson, V.G., said the committal service at the graveside.

The bearers were Messrs. James Lafferty, James Delair, George Whelan, Harry Ridley, James Kelderhouse and Terence Black.

Letters to the Editor

PRAYING SMITH

To The Ontario Intelligencer,
Dear Sir,—

Reading Friday's paper we saw that there had been found a Praying Mantis at Belleville. They are very common here at Presqu'Ile Point. Teddy Clark found a lovely large one which looked and I found a large vivid green one.

Yours truly
Doreen Clark,
Presqu'Ile Point.

RECORD NUMBER LICENCES ISSUED

Evidence of the popularity of the fishing grounds of Hastings County is seen in a record number of licenses issued for the month of August, George Finch, issuer of licences, stated today.

"We have issued by far the largest number during the present month in a number of years," Mr. Finch said, "and the applications are coming in from nearly every state in the Union has been represented, with people from all parts of Ontario here for their favorite pastimes".

ENTERTAINMENT TALENT AT FAIR

Outstanding Features at Belleville Exhibition For 4 Days

The company supplying the special entertainment attractions for the Belleville Fair are firmly established as leading producers of entertainment and have promised to outdo their previous efforts, in bringing to Belleville the most outstanding array of talent ever offered.

There will be clowns, clown band, and sensational novelty acts for enjoyment in the afternoon, and at night the special "Coronation Revue". This spectacular Revue is beautifully staged with colorful scenic and lighting effects, and offers skating, dancing, comedy, thrilling circus acts, funny clowns, etc. A few of the outstanding features will be The Radio Athletical serial trapeze artists, Rovell a Jeanette, whirlwind roller skaters, plus a galaxy of radio and stage stars.

All in all, it promises to be the greatest show ever presented at Belleville, so remember the dates and plan to attend!

3 Belleville Girls Compete in Contest

Three little Belleville girls, all pupils of Miss Mary Fowler's teaching, competed in the recent Daily Shirley Temple contest at the Canadian Exhibition on Saturday and were among the five finalists in the day's competition. They were Barbara Lamont, Madeline Walden and Joy Campbell, who received honorable mention.

Twenty-five children paraded before the judges in groups of five, each group competing in an eliminated until only one was left in each group. Shirley Temple, child of Treasurer was winner on Saturday and is qualified to enter the final judging.

Each little Belleville girls made a charming appearance. Each wore the typical Shirley Temple costume of curls and wore a pink ballet costume, Madeline an accordion pleated white frock, and Joy the princess dress in white sag blue.

The judges were impressed with the beauty and charm of these Canadian children and had the contest been a beauty show, instead of a resemblance contest, they would have found their duties much more difficult.

BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, TUESDAY, AUGUST 31, 1937

DEPUTY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE OPENS FAIR

Development of Fairs Traced by Dr. Barton As He Opens Exhibition

Pasture Vital, He Said, to Progress of Agriculture

PHASES OF FARMING

Mayor Arnott Commends Work of Belleville Fair Board

Favored by the happy augury of success during the next four days and nights of Belleville's biggest annual event by the bright sunshine which flooded the scene, the city's twelfth annual Fair was declared officially open shortly after two o'clock this afternoon by Dr. A. H. Barton, Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion, following a luncheon tendered the honored guest at the exhibition ground by directors of the Fair Board.

The Fair was opened to the preverbal fluttering of flags, the boom of small cannon and the happy shouts of the hundreds of children who swarmed the swards and greens taking full advantage of the day annually set aside as "Children's Day".

Largest Entry List.

Predicting this year's event as probably the largest that has been held since the inception of the first fair, Judging Secretary Hollis in an overwhelming number of exhibitors and exhibits in every department, directors of the board today at the opening displayed their optimism and hope by the smiles and expressions of satisfaction.

Today is a day that will be well attended by local patrons and district residents alike, it was indicated by the large number that had been admitted to the grounds during the morning and afternoon hours.

In front of the grandstand this afternoon, about the time of official opening, the first of the large number of amusement items were being given while one of the most ambitious programs yet arranged.

The Sell And The Fair.

The sell of the county and the Fair of Belleville was closely linked by Dr. H. A. Barton Deputy Minister of Agriculture for the Dominion who officially opened Belleville's Fair at two o'clock this afternoon, speaking at a luncheon tendered the honored guest by Fair Directors.

"For without the fertility of the soil, Belleville would not have a fair. In fact the city itself won't not be in the position in which she is pointed out the well known agriculture.

Dr. Barton, introduced by Col. Rocco Vanderwater, ranged in his brief address from soil to cattle and the shade trees so noticeable in the streets of Belleville.

Local Fair Success

"In these trying conditions it speaks well for the success of the Belleville Fair, year after year. It is one that is always a success in official inspection. This is clearly evident by the type of men they attempt always to get at their head as the opening day. Men who are not acquainted with the county but fit the produce. And it is a fine thing to encourage the state of perfection so apparent.

Citing the growth of the Belleville fair, he said it has become the "big" names of former marathon cattle shows were absent from the south George Young, winner of the Marathon Swim in 1927 and former winner of the Toronto marathon, did not enter, Neither did Marvin Nelson, of Port Dodge, Iowa, nor George Blagden of Memphis, Texas.

Gianni Bandi of Revenna, Italy, was the first to show in front, but the dash to the turn, a half mile from the starting line, the veteran swimmer picked up two yard lead followed closely by four or five others. The rest of the field was bunched.

Dr. Semple Thanked By Congregation of Carlton St. Church

Toronto, August 31.—Rev. Dr. James Semple, B.A., of Carlton United Church, of Belleville, has been appointed pastor of old Carlton Street Church during August.

Dr. Semple preached his last Sunday night Mr. J. W. L. Forrester on behalf of the congregation read an address of appreciation to Dr. Semple for his eloquent sermons, progressive thinking and his forward-looking leadership. Large congregations heard him every Sunday evening during the past year in the church. He has made a host of friends in the church and city. He will always be a welcome visitor to the congregation," said a member of the congregation.

"Each district should be served by one important fair," declared the speaker.

Over the years agriculturists have taken a great deal from the soil, but many forget that in so doing they should replace those vital essentials.

Cheese has played an important part in the development of this district, declared Dr. Barton, placing this industry as one of the leaders.

Dairy Herds

"Canning perhaps comes next. But most important of all, and what should be most important to this section is the development of dairy herds. For a long time this has been the advantage. But you have not succeeded in holding this or raising the level of the herds. Even in the most remote districts mongrel herds are disappearing.

"There is a good cash crop in cattle. And you have a better one in cattle. Many an export door is open for this, but you need better feed and quality.

"Pasture is vital", continued the speaker. "The strength and wealth of the country can be helped greatly by paying more attention to good pastures. This is also a valuable insurance that can be had in eastern Canada.

In his reference to the Tuberculosis areas, Dr. Barton pointed out that only one herd was found in the Hastings County. "The health of the herds in permanent areas a prime requisite.

A vote of thanks to the speaker was moved by Mr. David Thrasher, first vice president of the Belleville Fair Board.

Previous to the remarks of Dr. Barton, Mayor Richard D. Arnott offered his respects to the Deputy Minister and the efforts of the Fair Board.

MEDICAL FORCES ARE MARSHALLED AGAINST PLAGUE

Seven Zones Are Established in Province

CONSULTANTS NAMED

Death List Stands at 27 And Stricken at 400

(By The Canadian Press)

Toronto, August 31 (CP)—Twenty new cases of infantile paralysis were reported to the Toronto Health Department today, bringing the total of those stricken since June 10 to 400. There have been 27 deaths since the epidemic broke out.

Five more Ontario municipalities were added today to the lengthening list of those where school opening has been deferred because of infantile paralysis epidemic. All Ontario schools were to open tomorrow but a dozen or more have decided to postpone opening until Sept. 7 or later.

Death list from the plague which struck epidemic proportions in Southern Ontario in June and spread through the province in July, now stands at 27. Close to 400 have been stricken since the outbreak began and Dr. Fraser Brock, provincial health officer, said the number might cause another flare-up.

Napanee Reopening Delayed.

Gananoque and Napanee were Eastern Ontario centres postponing school opening last night, although taking the step only as a precautionary measure because each is free of the disease. Gananoque children won't have to return until Sept. 7, a school board official said, because the child in an epidemic ten years ago having made a plea for postponement. Napanee's date is Sept. 8.

With five cases in that area, Kitchener and Waterloo acted jointly to keep their schools closed as did Sarnia, until Sept. 7. Similar provisions had previously been made in London, Toronto and other afflicted centres.

Medical Forces Marshalled.

Montreal, remembering how the Ontario Health Department aided her in a similar epidemic some years ago, moved to obtain and organize serum from its recovered sufferers for use in Ontario. At many places throughout the province blood was being taken from donors and health officials announced the provincial department had a week's supply on hand.

Medical forces were being marshalled at all points in the fight which Dominion officials hoped to be followed throughout seven zones into which Ontario was divided and mapped out by newly-appointed consultants to Provincial Officers of Health at a Toronto meeting yesterday. The new appointees will be on call to the health officers in their districts.

New Appointees Named.

The new appointees and their districts are: Dr. A. M. Doyle, Kingston; Dr. H. D. Mitchell, Whitby; Dr. C. H. Cameron, Peterboro; Dr. Easton, Hamilton; Dr. C. E. Hanna, Brantford; Dr. Lennox and Dr. G. S. Hobbs, London.

Experts gathered in Toronto to discuss the situation and consider whether all necessary steps were being taken in the provincial capital where nearly two-thirds of the Ontario cases have been reported in a week-end. A call went out to 5,000 children to be given protection by nasal inoculation of zinc sulphate to supplement the preventative measure.

The Loudon Flying Club postponed its air meet, scheduled for Labor Day, for two or three weeks because of the epidemic and the St. Catharines Air Show, to have been held this Friday, also was reported postponed, for the same reason.

7 DIE IN COLLISION

Boshen, Ind., Aug. 31 (AP)—At least seven persons were reported to have been killed five miles south of here today in a crash of a heavy-laden passenger train and an auto sedan. Twenty injured were brought to hospitals here and at least 15 others were reported taken to nearby cities.

SIXTY-SIX ENTER 10 MILE SWIM

Only 7,000 Line Sea Wall as Tom Mix Fires Starting Gun

Lakefront, Toronto, Aug. 31 (CP)—Sixty-six long distance swimming specialists plunged into Lake Ontario at 2 p.m. E.D.T. today in the annual Canadian National Exhibition 10-mile marathon. The temperature at the water was 76 when the race started.

Tom Mix, former cowboy screen star, who has also won fame as a marathoners away seeting first Mississauga, then Toronto Islands, Toronto swimmer, was the last in leave the starting barge. He had taken part in the event yearly but has never been able to finish. His boat, a bell attached to lead him across the course, reached him about 100 yards from the start.

Others were forced to wait until the swimmers passed their boats could pick up their charges.

Canada Cleveland-Berry swim was the first to be pulled from the water. He was dragged out barely conscious. Other early stars in the "big" names of former marathon classics were absent from the event. George Young, winner of the Marathon Swim in 1927 and former winner of the Toronto marathon, did not enter, Neither did Marvin Nelson, of Port Dodge, Iowa, nor George Blagden of Memphis, Texas.

Gianni Bandi of Revenna, Italy, was the first to show in front, but the dash to the turn, a half mile from the starting line, the veteran swimmer picked up two yard lead followed closely by four or five others. The rest of the field was bunched.

Why the Weather?

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Lightning effects! Lightning produces startling heating and mechanical effects. It has melted wires and caused vaporized them, made holes in large pieces of metal, blown chimneys to pieces, and reduced trees to splinters. It is believed that it does most of its suits are acoustically explained by the sudden effect of the heat electric current. The current heats the air in a chimney line, then causing sudden expansion of the air and other gases and the collapse of the chimney. It also heats and vaporizes the sap in trees, splitting them and even turning them into burning. Trees or leaves when quite dry, are heated sufficiently to burn and in this way lightning is the cause of many forest fires.

GIRL BELIEVED DROWNED

WINDSOR, Ont., Aug. 31.—(CP)—Firemen dragged the Detroit River today for Geraldine Miller, 8, whose body is believed to be in the river. A boarder here, left a note in her room written in blacks. The note was not addressed to anyone.

"Sorry but I can't take life" the girl wrote. "See you fifth post, yours, Nora. Here's Mack watch. God bless and keep you both. Xo."

TIMES BETTER SAYS SHOWMAN

'Billy' Garden, Manager of Vaudeville Exchange Has The Proof

"Times better", I should say they are," Billy Garden, genial master of ceremonies and manager of the Canadian Vaudeville Exchange which is providing a splendid vaudeville performance in front of the grandstand for patrons of the Belleville Fair, stated today. "Amusement, I think is one of the best barometers of the trend of the times, and I can safely say that in ten years of compaigning the various amusement circuits of Canada that 1937 is without a doubt the best of them all, that is from a money-spending point of view on the part of the public and a determination on the part of the people to get out and enjoy themselves".

"Further proof of this," continued Mr. Garden, "is seen in the fact that we have had to put on a double act we have had to refuse "Joe." This is the first time we have had requests from all parts of the province, especially the fall fairs, to put on a show. The equipment while quite expensive would not permit us to do so. The result was that we had to refuse".

"Joe Penner is no different to Ontario," he said. "We have had returned from Three Rivers and other Quebec points and conditions down there are the "same. People are happier, are forgetting the hard struggle for livelihood that has characterized the past few years and with the advent of more work and consequently more money are turning to entertainment. We played to capacity crowds there. People are in their own accord and were not enticed as much through intensive ballyhoo and advertising as they were in a depressed. There seems to be a care-free attitude on the part of the public this year. People are lighter mood-ed, care-free and enjoy themselves with an abandon that is really sincere. They are spending money for the sheer enjoyment of it, and are taking actual pleasure in doing so."

SCHMELING OR FARR NEXT MOVE

Promoter Jacobs May Rematch Louis And Farr

New York, Aug. 31 (AP)—Pleased as he was with last night's 12 round match between Joe' Louis and Tommy Farr, promoter Mike Jacobs talked gleefully today of a return bout next June that will "do better than a million".

There hasn't been time for Mike to make any definite decision as to what his next heavyweight move will be but, for the time being at least, he seemed to think that Farr's brilliant and unexpected fight against the limit of fifteen rounds with the Brown Bomber entitled the rugged Welshman to another shot at the crown without further argument or discussion.

Although the fight failed to draw as well as he had expected, partly because of the slump in general, he now controls not only the heavyweight champion but three of the leading contenders—Max Schmeling, who was knocked out the negro in twelve rounds; Bob Pastor, who stayed the rounds with him, and Farr.

He may attempt to match Schmeling either against Farr or Pastor in a Madison Square Garden engagement in June. Mike takes over the garden's booking division on Oct. 1.

Thousands of Fights A La Louis-Farr

Belleville's downtown district went fight-minded last night. A scend-hub fell over that part of the city as the voice of the announcer carried the blow-by-blow description of the Joe Louis-Louis fight to the many fans congregated in and around restaurants, service stations and other places where radios blared forth the stirring comment of the big fight.

Radio-equipped cars parked along Front and other streets, were the centres of interested groups of people. Second story apartments with windows open at the best of the evening caught the news to fans stationed below on the sidewalk. People forgot the warmth of the evening as the fight progressed to bear the story of a stout-hearted Welshman carrying the fight to the dusky champion in a ring classic that will go down in history as one of the best on record.

HEPBURN OPPOSES SCHEME TO DEEPEN THE ST. LAWRENCE

Says He is The Last Stumbling Block to Project

430,000 H. P. READY

Asks Mr. Rowe to Show Him Customers To Use Surplus

London, Ont., Aug. 31 (CP) — A new issue was before Ontario electors today with Premier Mitchell Hepburn's description of himself as "the last stumbling block in the way of the scheme to deepen the St. Lawrence."

Two railroadways plan, aimed to make the St. Lawrence navigable for ocean-going ships above Montreal and to develop power, the developments, was brought into the provincial campaign here last night with Mr. Hepburn's declaration he was opposed to it.

Ontario car own transport Systems are operating at a loss I am strongly against it," he said. What Mr. King (Prime Minister; King) is in favor of it. Mr. Roosevelt (President Roosevelt) is in favor of it. The State of New York is in favor of it. Hon. Earl Rowe (Ontario Conservative leader) is in favor of it."

Premier Premier George Henry "blindly signed" an agreement with the Federal government committing Ontario for a 10,000,000 expenditure on the waterways scheme, Mr. Hepburn said, adding "but I stand in the way. If you want to go into debt another $100,000,000 then vote for Mr. Rowe."

Mr. Duncan Renominated.

Addressing a Liberal convention that renominated Dr. A. S. Duncan, Leeds-Grenville member of the legislature, Mr. Hepburn rapped Mr. Rowe for charging Ontario faces a shortage of electrical power. Available anytime for Ontario's publicly-owned Hydro-Electric Power System are 430,000 horsepower from the Gatineau, Mclaren and Beauharnois Power Companies, he said.

"We can get that additional 430,000 horsepower at a cost of $2,800,000," he went on. "If Mr. Rowe can show me where there are customers to use it then we'll supply them. If he can't get those customers then it's about time he stopped shouting about a power shortage."

Credit should be given to his government for the establishment of lower interest rates on public borrowings, Mr. Hepburn said, the government's drive to bring down the rate had effected a saving to the municipalities in their borrowings.

Chinese Bandits Kidnap 10 Priests

Peiping, Aug. 31.—(CP-Havas)—Ten Marist Fathers, three of them Canadians, one Irish and six others of various nationalities, were held as hostages in the hinterland near Peiping today by bandits who raided their seminary not far from the city.

The heads of the mission and one aged father were released, the former because he was seriously wounded and the latter because of his age. The bandits asked $164,000 ransom.

Representatives of the French Embassy sought the release of the bandit refuge with a detachment of Japanese soldiers but the weather made pursuit of the kidnappers difficult.

Draft Hymnal for Anglicans Contains 387 New Tunes

157 Hymns Retained From Old Hymn Book

SMALLER IN VOLUME

Halifax, Aug. 31 (CP)—Discussion on a new hymnal occupied the greater part of the forenoon session when the two houses of the Anglican General Synod met in joint session today.

St. Rev. L. W. B. Brongall, Bishop of Niagara, read the report of the committee entrusted with the preparation of a revised hymnal, to be called "The Book of Common Praise". The existing hymnal is known as "The Hymn Book".

A draft copy of the new book was placed in the hands of delegates and was presented as the result of the committee's work over the last three years.

According to the report, the new hymn book contains 157 hymns and 387 tunes not in the present book. Names of sections have been changed as the committee saw fit and new sections added.

Bishop Brougfall prefaced reading of the report with remarks emphasizing the "extreme difficulty" the committee encountered, particularly in choosing hymns to preserve in the hymn book. Such omissions were not made in haste, the Bishop said, but each deliberated on at length.

Composition of the new book was changed to allow inclusion of more material while avoiding increase in volume, he said. One of the chief changes of this nature is the omission of the Scriptural Texts from the smaller editions.

Bubonic Plague Reported In Native Quarters, Authorities Take Steps

Japanese Fire Bodies of Dead Chinese With Gasoline

CHINESE HORRIFIED

Sanitary Officers Are Seriously Handicapped in Work

Shanghai, Aug. 31 (AP)—Cholera broke out tonight in Shanghai's French Concession.

The outbreak became known shortly before midnight and French Concession authorities took every measure to halt its spread.

Cholera is a deadly intestinal disease which yearly takes its toll of unclaimed Asiatics.

An outbreak of the Black (Bubonic) Plague in native areas was also rumored.

Hundreds of rotting bodies of slain Chinese civilians brought millions of disease-carrying rats and insects to the area north of Soochow Creek.

Health Authorities Hampered.

Sanitary officers from the International Settlement were seriously hampered in their work there. The Japanese military insisted the attractions be closed because of the presence of looters and the danger of Chinese troops returning there from the north and west.

Japanese were firing the bodies after saturating them with gasoline.

It is itself horrible the scene reviving Chinese, for they believe the burning of a body means there can be no redemption in the life beyond.

NATIONS LEAGUE IS ONLY AGENCY OF WORLD PEACE

Mr. Victor Sifton Tells Belleville Rotarians of League's Possibilities

WAR A TOTAL LOSS

The League of Nations has suffered more failures than successes, but it is the only international body which is working for world peace, and on that account should be supported and encouraged. Various cities on the North American Continent are notorious for their lawlessness, but that is no reason why police forces in those cities should be abolished, declared the League of Nations, despite its failures as the only international organization working for world peace should not be abolished.

Thus was the present situation of the League of Nations summed up by Victor Sifton, general manager of the Winnipeg Free Press, in a talk to the Belleville Rotarians Monday, in the Hotel Quinte.

Top Hat and Tails

Privileged to attend the sessions of the League of Nations assembly in Geneva the last year as official Canadian observer, Mr. Sifton had an unique opportunity of studying the workings of the organization, with occasional peeps behind the scenes, revealing why and the wherefore of subsequent actions. The assembly of the League of Nations is a most democratic orb with full, free and frank discussion. There was no sign of diplomatic formality and the only top hat and tails worn was worn by a Canadian.

French and English are the official languages, but other languages can be used on occasion. Six interpreters take the speeches down in shorthand and when the speaker resumes he and the interpreters repeat the speech from their notes in another language, and often in another tongue. Even a five-minute speech in a language or mixture of languages, however, takes up so far as gestures and emphasis were concerned, quite a bit of distinguished Greek linguist and said he would repeat the speech in English with the same gestures and turning to the Oriental who had spoken in Chinese and remarked, "Did I make it perfectly clear?" Said the Oriental, "NO!"

War a Total Loss

There is a difference of opinion in regard to the League of Nations, some say stay out, others believe that war is inevitable, justifiable, and under a grand psyche containing much that is good. These latter are certainly under thirty years of age, said the speaker, and have had no intimate knowledge of war. Those who had close connection with the Great War can hardly believe in its justifiable about war—nothing but a total loss. Another war waged on the same scale and under the same conditions as governed the Great War, said Mr. Sifton, would bankrupt Canada and cause a financial debacle from which would set the country back a century.

The war debt to date totalled four billion dollars ($4,000,000,000) and the annual interest charges, sinking fund, amount to $100,000,000. Put another way on top of that and imagine the debt burden. Not one dollar of the war debt of Canada has been liquidated to the present.

The medal is silver, affixed to the conventional ribbon and shows the raised heads of Their Majesties, George VI and Queen Elizabeth, inverted 13th May, 1937.

BICYCLE COLLIDES WITH PASSING CAR

Allen Weese, 15 of Bull Street, sustained head lacerations and leg injuries as he rode to a fall on residential street when his bicycle collided with a passing motor car at the intersection of Bleecker St. and Bleecker Ave., last evening. The lad was taken to the surgery of Dr. A. E. Flynn, P. C. Evans investigated and reported young Weese was riding his bicycle east on Emily Street and had collided with the rear of a motor car being driven on Bleecker Avenue, by Ray Hamilton of this city. Police allege there was no light displayed on the bicycle and attached no blame upon Hamilton, who escaped and rendered what assistance possible. The bicycle was badly damaged, while young Weese received several nasty

'JUNGLE' SCOURED FOR MISSING CLOTHES

Clothesline thieves were reported active in Belleville last night, apparently after midnight. Mrs. B. Masterson, 97 East Moira Street, reported the theft of a shirt and bed sheet from her clothesline. Local police scoured the known transient jungles last and west of the city without results, however.

CHINESE COLLECT MONEY FOR CAUSE

Though the work has been carried on unobtrusively and quietly, Chinese of the city have also been active for some time past in the collection of small sums of money from various individuals for the purpose of forwarding it to their native country to assist in the fight against their hereditary foe, the Japanese. It was reported that the owner of one small laundry had donated the sum of $25 alone for the cause.

COMMENCE SANDING AT CIVIC BEACH

Belleville's civic beach just on the eastern edge of the city on the bay shore took on additional interest yesterday for the hundreds who use the popular spot daily with the commencement of the sanding of the wide beach strip by officials of the Bay of Quinte Beaches Association, who have been carrying on the work of development there for the past year or two. With the removal of obstructions and weeds, clear water, together with pretty wooded slides for young and old have made the location an appealing spot.

PRICES MAINTAIN A FIRM NOTE

Strawberries Offered Buying Public at 25 Cents Box

Prices maintained a firm note at the city market today with a good display of farm and dairy produce being offered Tuesday morning shoppers by a fair representation of vendors. While the display consisted mainly of staple fruits and vegetables, a distinct novelty was seen in the presence of strawberries. This fruit ranging the popular fancy and the vendor had little difficulty in disposing of his stock at twenty five cents per box.

Tomatoes showed little change in price with basket lots grilled at fifty cents and baskets at fifteen and twenty cents. Potatoes like-wise remained firm being offered at eighty cents per bushel and peck lots at twenty cents. Cucumbers are in plentiful and sold at fifteen cents per dozen ears with some vendors quoting two dozen lots at twenty-five cents. Onions warrant, lots selling at five cents sold at prevailing prices.

Imported peaches headed a variable fruit display with selects selling as five for twenty-five. No. 2's at forty and 3's at thirty five cents. Burbank plums and green gages were offered at forty and thirty five cents per basket and fall apples of the cooking variety at thirty cents the peck.

Pears were offered at twenty seven cents, Chinese were scarce with a few sprigdera, selling at from sixty cents up.

LONE WOLF TO ARRIVE AFTER LONG CANOE TRIP

Travelling in his well laden canoe down the Trent Waterways at present, in the same home made rugged craft, that has carried him over thousands of miles of the country's waterways, Clarke (Mossmuggin) Wallace is known as Lone Wolf, a husky Cree Indian, who favored the Daily Ontario Intelligencer with an extended interview just three years ago, when he visited the city of Quinte this week.

"Lone Wolf," who spends his rigorous life entirely in the open, and familiar to the waterways of the Province has mastered the method of living in a declared attempt to meet all the needs of life, received while serving with the 46th South Saskatchewan Battalion in the Great War.

"Hoving Jane", the familiarly labelled craft, half canoe and half heavy rowboat carries among his other numerous effects his stock of home made medicines with which he makes his living as he travels. Since last April, he completed the 1,400 mile trip to Peterborough this week solely by rowing.

Fifty seven years of age and now a splendid specimen of bronzed manhood "Lone Wolf" is an advertisement for health and strength. He travels stripped to the waist and has developed a splendid set of muscles due to the daily exercise of rowing.

From Belleville he will travel by water to Ottawa and will return by the northern waterway system to Winnipeg before winter again sets in.

80 Year-Old-Man's Birthday Cake Eaten By Sneaking Thief

The meanest man in the world is in danger of losing his friends. The latest addition to the exalted position lives in the vicinity of Lindsay and made a strong bid for first place at a party given to Robert Baird, Sunderland engineer-farmer, the other day. After the celebration of Baird's eightieth birthday, the elderly man retired to bed. While peacefully sleeping and dreaming of the many fine friends he had, someone entered the house and relieved him of the remainder of the birthday cake, leaving in its stead a bottle of milk. They did not get much money, but the small change that was in a small purse lying on a table downstairs.

ANXIETY FOR MISSIONARIES

Peiping, Aug. 31.—(AP)—Anxiety was expressed here today for nineteen-year-old Ruth Stanley, daughter of Rev. John Stanley of Shantung Province who have not been heard from since the consulate at Tsinanfu, the Provincial Capital, was closed last Friday.

The Shantung missionaries, as well as forty more in Southern Hopeh Province, were directly in the path of two Japanese C. Lumma, advancing southward from Peiping and Tientsin.

FARMERS' SONS TRADE NEW BIKES FOR OLD MOTORS

When Joel Murphy, farmer residing near Wellington, bought his two young sons brand new bicycles, he thought their attention would be diverted from the family automobile. For a week they explored the surrounding countryside on their new toys, then the novelty and glamor of the shiny bikes wore off.

Last Sunday morning, hearing a terrific clatter in the lane, Murphy looked out the window and saw a strange procession winding itself towards the house. A dilapidated Ford car sputtered and strained its way along the lane. Behind it and being towed, came another relic of the automobile industry. At the wheel of the first car sat two shining faced youths. With a rear and a rattle the queer parade stopped at the house.

"How do you like em?" chortled a young owner, "we traded our bikes for them. We got the second one to fix up the first."

Morris Faulkner, Hit by Foul Tip While Catching

A painful accident, that ultimately resulted in the removal of the left eye, was sustained by eleven year old Morris Faulkner, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Faulkner, 105 Yeomans St. late last week. The lad was playing ball with a number of other playmates in the vicinity of his home when he acted in the capacity of catcher for his team, when he was struck in the left eye with a foul tip ball, causing a hemorrhage of the eye and internal disorder. Dr. Gray was summoned and after careful examination ordered the little lad to the Belleville General Hospital where the injured optic was removed. The operation is reported to have been highly successful, however.

Midway Shows Here First in Canada In 4 Years' Time

The midway show which caught the popular fancy at its debut in the Belleville Agricultural Grounds today likewise celebrated its first appearance in Ontario in four years. Coming direct to Belleville from the Canadian National Exhibition where it has played for the last few years, the midway offers attractions that are said to even win entertainments of this nature.

Humor prevalent in the city that the shows came direct from Toronto here were quick to point officials today "We have not shown in Toronto for the past four years" it was stated." "Today marks our first appearance in Ontario over a long period of time."

TEXTILE WORKERS TO AGAIN RETURN

1,700 Employees Go Back To Factories After Settlement

Cornwall, Aug. 31 (CP)—The 1,700 employees of Canadian Cottons Ltd., who walked out from the three mills here some days ago, will return to work Wednesday. Workers spokesmen last night assured Provincial Conciliation Officer Louis Fine there would be no repetition of the sympathetic strike by the majority.

The men return with the original undertaking given to Premier Hepburn by the company still holding good. All disputed matters will be dealt with by the Workers Grievance Committees which are shortly to be elected. The Ontario Industrial and Labor Board is the medium to which the contentious issues will be referred for adjustment.

This walkout followed only three days after a similar walkout by the strikers in the three plants, after they had been on strike for a week. The second strike was not called by the Textile Union, and the cause of the dispute was "wage-

MONEY IS FOUND ON OSHAWA YOUTH

Raymond Fontaine Remanded Till Friday on Charge of Theft

Raymond Fontaine, 16 year old Oshawa youth, was arrested on a charge of theft and lodged in the Belleville jail following the recovery of money reported missing from the home of George Dusseberry, 40 Dundas Street and allegedly found in Fontaine's possession when police stated today after investigations by Sergeant Arthur Booth.

Early yesterday afternoon a youthful bandit entered the home of Dusseberry's residence and enquired if he could leave his rolled blanket bundle in Mr. Dusseberry's residence, while he rested. After placing the bundle in a safe corner, when the lad disappeared only to reappear some hours later and regained his belongings. Mr. Dusseberry informed him the bundle was in the closet of Brockville on the plumbing activities without incident.

Some time later, however, Mrs. Dusseberry discovering the purse, containing the cheque and cash to the amount of $36.00 had disappeared. Police officials were notified and Detectived Sergeant Booth and after receiving the information the incident of the transient leaving the bundle, Sergeant Booth and Mr. Dusseberry proceeded south in search of the youth, eventually apprehending Fontaine at the junction of Highway No. 2 and Dundas and Highway No. 2. Mr. Dusseberry identified the lad as the man to leave the bundle at his home, while subsequent searching of the youth revealed the cheque and accounting to $36.00 to be found in his possession. Fontaine was arraigned and further Sergeant Booth recovered $10.00, Dusseberry's loss, where it had been abandoned along the abutment wall of the Moira River on the Dundas St.

A charge of theft was preferred against Fontaine and the lad will be arpeared before H. B. Wilson, local Judge of the Peace, where he was remanded to the custody of the county jail for one week.

MINIATURE AUTOS THRILL CHILDREN

Any One Can Drive Them on Special Track at Fair Grounds

HAVE SMALL MOTORS

Eight beautiful streamlined miniature automobiles, driven by individual motors in colors of red, yellow and green with their contours designed strictly after the models of famous racing cars, whirling around a steel covered track with diminutive drivers at the wheel, forms the outstanding attraction of the Jackson Midway Shows at the Fair.

Easy of operation.—the smallest child can drive them. The cars are equipped with broad four inch bumpers which encircle the entire car, eliminating any danger of crashes from collision. They whirl around the circular track at a high rate of speed. A touch of the foot upon a tiny clutch starts the cars in motion while added pressure increases the speed. Spedding seats provide for the accommodation of three children or two adults.

Shown for the first time in Canada, the new attraction was the center of hundreds of admiring children today. Many took advantage of the thrills obtained from the whirling cars. The Auto Speedway, as it is called, struck a popular note with the youth of Belleville while not a few grownups took advantage of the miniature cars to add to the day's enjoyment.

Another distinct innovation in mechanical entertainment appearances is the "Loop-the-Loop". Three oblong wire enclosed cages heavily weighted at the bottom whirl up and around a circular metal frame. Impetus to the cage is given by the momentum of the bodies of the riders, the cages reach the top of the circle the weight of the riders' bodies thrown forward by the upswing of the cages speeds the cages on their downward arc. Weights at the bottom of the cages swinging forward throw the cages up and around, and so on. This feature is also playing for the first time in Canada, and proved a source of enjoyment for a large crowd of thrill-seekers today.

The Second Day

Saturday was second day at the "Ex" as it is generally called in Toronto. The day was fine but warm, and the attendance seemed to be large due to the special features of the day such as a procession of warriors with bands, and a special one mile swimming race for women. There were other attractive features as well. On the whole one realized that the "Ex" was in-full swing again though the maximum peak would not be reached for a week.

MANUFACTURERS' BUILDING

While waiting for the best features of the day which usually take place in the afternoon I visited various places of interest.

The Manufacturers' Building is next to the Press Building, where I write, and spend my resting moments comfortably. The former is large and contains perhaps the most costly booths on the exhibition grounds. As the name implies this building contains many things that are manufactured. (chiefly in Ontario) for the home and personal use such as pianos, radios, dress goods, purple, and perfume, cut glass, men's and ladies' wear and many others. Attendance in each booth are eager to explain and give detailed information. As all conveniences are found in this place in an ordinary zone of voice, this is a pleasant place to visit quite different from the flood Provincial Building, or above all the midway where one has to yell to speak louder and be more impressive than his neighbour.

Some booths are sprayed with perfume and then offered a couple of small bottles for 25 cents. Similar sales take place in most of these booths but in a very mild, genteel manner.

The latest kind in modern facilities of this building all the fall styles for dresses and coats. I hope in a day or two to give you some authentic details in this connection.

Several living rooms of all kinds are finished and furnished to exemplify certain styles of interior decoration. With the exception of two rooms all walls are perfectly plain in one tone except for a narrow but what bright border around the top, and the ceiling is the same as the walls. The tone may be light, never garish, and the walls determine the shade of the furnishings of the room which are as near the color of the walls as possible except for curtains, drapes and vases which vary for contrast and to enliven the general effect. Each booth is a study and authentic on this subject, because his own home was done over throughout recently on this principle with the result that he is very beautifully situated, and after all that is what the ideal home should be.

However two rooms are done differently and so much so models but rather in contrast to emphasize the perfection of the others. The furnishings of these two are for dining rooms. The paper has large bright patterns such as roses, foliage and also in large bunches. As I was writing those notes gazing at this rose decoration, a lady at my side whispered, "Is that French style?"

"Madam, the French never, never exhibited such horrible taste, and I know what I am saying," I replied respectfully.

"I am glad I spoke, because to me it is hideous."

I believe that the average woman would experience the same revulsive feeling. The one tone effect in all the booths and the simplicity of interior decoration is known as modernistic, and is largely inspired by the remote past.

In a separate part of this same building is an immense display of all kinds of needle-work, and knitting, all done by hand. It is all so beautiful and gives evidence of an much patience and skill that I am not capable of telling you more about it.

After spending a couple of hours as described above, I roamed around for a time in the fresh air. Soon I came upon three lads, each about ten, who were fishing in a trough of swiftly running water so murky that you could not see what it contained. After several times each hooked up some metal object, and was given the prize corresponding to that particular catch, generally such things as knives and whistles, which every boy covets.

"How much money have you left now out of your two dollars, Fred," inquired one of the lads.

"Twenty-five cents," came the prompt reply. "I never, had so much fun in all my life! One day I went to a movie and spent a dime."

Then I came upon the most wonderful incident I ever know. A little girl of six with fine, massive brown hair, and mouth slip dotted with blue sat on the grass beside her father. The girl had been to the Exhibition before and ings, because they had three paper shopping bags filled to the top with all kinds of packages sold at the many booths. Her father, Daddy had bought everything that she admired. At one of the booths she was presented with a dilapidated tinted paper doll, small enough to be carried over like those high hats worn so becoming by French girls dressed in cadet uniforms. It was a picture that would have kept Joshua Reynolds awake until he had given the world a picture much superior to his famous "Age of Innocence", because my fairy had lovely blue, smiling eyes, refined, beautiful features and natural grace of movement that would attract attention.

For half an hour I watched her as she withdrew, and opened her packages always delightfully hopeful and happy with her many discoveries.

"What is this Daddy?"

"It's a cake of soap."

Then she smelled it and smile as if to say, "Just what I wanted". She knew perfume by instinct.

"Smell this Daddy—it's just lovely."

It was soon evident that Daddy loved her more than his own life.

Every article was rewrapped by her tiny hands with the utmost precision and care for Mama must share the joys of the day with Daddy.

I had been looking long for a supremely happy soul, and here in a most accidental manner I had found this precious gem. Then I understood those inspiring words, "Of of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

May I tell you frankly that I would have gone to the other side of the world to witness this heavenly scene? Would you be surprised to know that I sat down beside them, and enjoyed their wonderful friendship more than I can express?

SATURDAY AT NOON

At twelve noon this second day something happened of more than ordinary importance for me. I went to the Automotive Building and handed over my exhibit of Canada's First Stamp to the Exhibition authorities and received in return an insurance policy covering their loss or damage to the amount of five thousand dollars. It cost the Canadian National Exhibition twelve and a half dollars to secure this policy for me.

At the same time I was informed that one hundred and ninety-two daily papers in the United States, and also many in Canada, have printed recently an account of my rare twelve penny black, its owner, and also Belleville, and the fact that it is on display at the Toronto Fair. Much also has been said concurrently over various radio stations. Needless to say I am much excited.

AUTOMOTIVE BUILDING

This is a beautiful building with very colorful exhibits. On the ground floor about five hundred automobiles of every make and recent design are displayed. The many colored cars, vases of flowers and plants, and rugs constitute an exceedingly pretty sight. A few cars are placed on revolving circular tables which are covered with red or yellow plush.

A gallery about a hundred feet wide runs around the interior of this building and here may be found exhibits of paintings by amateurs, postage stamps and many other interesting things. My exhibit of Canada's First Postage Stamps may be found in this gallery.

PARADE OF WARRIORS

The main feature of the second day was the parade of about twenty thousand warriors representing every part of the Canadian Service such as air, artillery, infantry, mounties, cadets navy and veterans of the Great War. The latter were by far the largest in numbers. There were scores of bands and it required an hour for the procession to pass a given point. Many remarked that it was the most impressive thing of the kind ever known in Toronto.

The interest was keener due to the fact that several companies of returned men from the United States joined in the parade. Moreover a United States war vessel rode at anchor in the lake almost within a stone's throw of the grounds.

The many fluttering flags, the bands, the bagpipes, the bugles, the variously colored berets (caps) worn by the marchers, the uniforms, the rhythmical tread of feet, and the clinking of thousands of valorous medals, made the pulse of young and old beat fast. It was a sight well worth coming to see, if you felt that it portended peace, not war.

WOMEN'S ONE MILE SWIM

After the parade just before sundown about a dozen women contended for supremacy in a one mile speed contest. The weather was fine and the water at a temperature of seventy was perfectly calm. An immense lawn slopes down gently to the water, thus giving many thousands a clear vision of the swimmers.

Within a minute after the plunge into the water three women drew away rapidly from the rest, and kept pretty well together on the half mile east. Then on the return one fell behind fifty yards or more, but the other two were close together up to the finish. Both appeared to be nearly equally good swim very differently. One used a strong full crawl stroke, and seemed to be having a tireless time. The other took two shorter strokes to the former's one, and seemed to be more tense and to be using up energy rapidly.

Miss Margaret Stone, Toronto, used the strong full stroke and won by a small lead. The opinion prevailed that she could have led by a wide margin if she wished to do so.

Miss Prize Sworden Miss Stone was also qualified for the championship of Canada.

A more important swimming contest takes place next Saturday.

IMPORTANT

The writer wishes to explain that he cannot report every event every day, because two or three are going on sometimes at once. To-day there was a fancy typewriting contest going on at the same time that the Veterans were marching. I select and report in such cases the event that is likely to be of most interest to you.

Best wishes to all.

What Local Theatre Managers Say About Coming Attractions

AT THE CAPITOL

"King of Gamblers" and "Step Lively Jeeves"

The "inside story" of the billion dollar illicit liquor trade as it operates in 'a big city, is laid bare in "King of Gamblers," a daring and thrilling motion picture story which comes to the Capitol tomorrow as smash hit No. 1 on a grand double bill.

Written by Tiffany Thayer, noted writer of crime and racket stories, Wm. Gamblers' melodrama with its sticking adherence to recent newspaper headlines, the circumstances of which led several Rackets cities to smash the racket and to consign the racketeers to the hot seats at the bottom.

The title role is played by Akim Tamiroff. He is supported by Claire Trevor, Lloyd Nolan, Larry Crabbe, Porter Hall, Helen Burgess and a number of other well-known screen players.

Tamiroff, an entirely unscrupulous racketeer, is in love with Miss Trevor, a night club entertainer, who does not know the man's business. Also in love and fallen in love with Nolan, a newspaper reporter, who is assigned to run the racketeer to earth

The thrilling climax is reached when Tamiroff, trapped, unleashes his fury in a last attempt to save his crumbling underworld empire and to avenge himself upon the man who has had him arrested and jailed.

Nolan's performance fully vindicates the producer's belief that in him they have a star who is destined to rival Clark Gable than any other screen player.

Wodehouse's "Step Lively, Jeeves"

Jeeves, as sad-eyed, so gentle, so utterly, utterly proper, thought paragland to be a bit of all right. They could swindle him, bamboozle him and baffle him about, but he insisted on proper manners, and so

Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in "Saratoga"

In response to an overwhelming the tide of fan demands by mail and telephone, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer went forward some weeks ago with the last platonic mate for Jean Harlow, platinum blond screen actress who shot to stardom with her first important screen role in "Reilly Ace". Her last picture, "Saratoga", her romance on race tracks, now on the Belle screen, finds her co-starred with Clark Gable, her leading man in many of her best screen triumphs, including "Red Dust" 'and "China Seas".

It was believed at first that it would be necessary to secure a double in the film to complete the picture. Luckily, however, Director Jack Conway had taken all the underworld is in a daze of a dither when P. G. Wodehouse's "gentleman's gentleman" series goes berserk for a delightful period of gleeful butchery in the second saga of the silly blighter's misadventures, "Step Lively, Jeeves!" featuring the inimitable Arthur Treacher in the title role, opens at the Capitol on Thursday as smash hit No. 2.

Patricia Ellis and Robert Kent are Jeeves' only friends in the strange America he is seeing for the first time in the person of Lord of Alan Dinehart and George Givot, a couple of ornithology-lying hard to make a dishonest living.

Fun and excitement to end attach to the ernest social-climbing efforts of Helen Flint, wife of a retired grangler, when she mandfies for her society splurge the help of the millions of Mr. Francis Drake the suddenly prominent "Earl of Bedford," which is the bogus title the two "con" men have bestowed upon their unsuspecting friend.

The screen play by Frank Richardson and Lynn Root, adapted from the original story by Frances Hyland, gets more and more hilarious-ly involved as the action nears, realizing they are trying to mulct a former public enemy and his cohorts, attempt to scramble out of that hot-deal, failing because they had sold their victim too thoroughly.

When Jeeves' true identity is disclosed there breaks loose a perfect works of an unsafe and insane Fourth-of-July nature, the hilarity of which is further heightened by Jeeves' typical sober and sensible way out of the difficulties.

Today Only

Shown for the last times today two grand revival hits bringing back for the enjoyment of those who missed them on previous showing. Claudette Colbert and Fred MacMurray are starred in the "Gilded Lily" and in "Education Father," the Jones family are shown in a hilarious comedy.

Final Appearance Of Popular Screen Team

Jean Harlow and Clark Gable in "Saratoga"

final scene in the film's close-up prior to the star's untimely death. All that remained to finish the film was a few "long distance shots" in which the face of the substitute actress has not been allowed to fall within camera range.

"Saratoga", by Anita Loos, author of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes", uses the romantic and colorful background of race tracks at one of the world's resorts, Santa Anita and, of course, the famed race course from which the picture's title is derived. Gable is again cast in the type of he-man role at which he excels and Miss Harlow is equally well placed as the story's pampered heiress who is lured back to earth through her love for her co-star, a worldly wise bookmaker and gambler.

LATTA

Latta, Aug. 31.—Mrs. H. Harrison had a lovely birthday party for her Sunday school class on Thursday. There were twenty-three children. They spent the afternoon on the lawn and played games and sang. Mrs. Harrison made each a little birthday cake and put the number of candles on it for as many years as they were old and to each cake for Miss Harlow in order to complete her prize. Mrs. Harrison told their fortune. If it was a thimble she told them that she was going to be a dressmaker, if it was a steamship that one would travel, if a purse they would be a cook, cannon—a soldier, etc., all the way to each little tot. They each brought pennies for each year they were old and sang "Hear the Pennies Dropping" as they fell into the dish. After lunch was over the children all wanted to stay longer as they had a happy afternoon which they will not forget.

Mrs. Clarence Hall, Mrs. W. Elliott and Mrs. R. Rollins were present at the party.

Miss assistant teacher, Miss B. Wilder, was invited there too but was far away on a honeymoon trip at the time.

The bridge between Hamilton's and Hinch's which has been an old landmark for nearly a year this time of Noah has been torn down and is being replaced by a new steel foundation. The road was closed to traffic on Thursday morning but will soon be all right again.

Master Garth McCreary and Jack Carleton spent Thursday afternoon with Master Walter and Howard Elliott.

Mrs. N. Denyes, Mrs. W. Elliott, Mrs. M. Hall and Miss Isobelle Elliott spent Thursday afternoon with Mrs. J. W. Hamilton.

Mrs. G. Beatty and Mrs. H. McCreary called at Mrs. J. W. Hamilton's on Thursday morning.

The Institute is putting on a big banquet in the Orange Hall, Plainfield, on Tuesday evening for the Latta ball team who won the play-offs.

Some came inside and some stayed on the lawn where it was much cooler. The groom treated the gathering to Transparent apples.

POINT ANNE

IN THE EAST

The undeclared struggle which is now being waged in the east has been marked by savagery of an unprecedented character.

Is war showing itself what it really is? Is the love of killing more accentuated than before? There have been thousands of non-combatants killed and many thousands wounded at and near Shanghai in bombardments which seem to westerners absolutely uncalled for. It seems as it were nothing to read these days of bombers killing thousands.

Then there is the wounding of the British ambassador. What was the motive of the Japanese flier who fired the machine gun bullet which struck the envoy? The action was unprecedented. A sort of excuse was that there was a rumor that the Chinese war-lord was thought to be on the Nanking-Shanghai road but even if this explains the shooting, it has been called one of the gravest offences of international law.

Even war, the negation of civilization, has in some ages of history been marked with certain forms of courtesies and restraints.

Britain and other western nations have moved firmly but with restraint. Britain's stand will make a great impression on Japan for British interests in China are far ahead of those of any other power in the Western world. Japan and Britain it is said have been growing closer to one another in economic outlook but present development will cause a cessation to that rapprochement and the alienation of British economic sympathy in the development of the Orient may result.

Meanwhile the western world is thinking over the trend of events since the occasion of what seemed an insignificant dispute between China and Japan which has been becoming more and more serious.

FISH CATCH GROWS

Canada's sea fishermen fared better in the first six months of 1937 than in the like period of last year. They increased their catch by over 315,000 hundredweights and their dollars and cents return or in other words the landed value of the catch was $374,000 or so greater than in the 1936 half-year.

In round figures, made up from unrevised statistics reported, the January-June catch of this year totalled 3,065,000 hundredweights and its value at points of landing, was $6,719,000. In the first half of 1936 the landings amounted to 2,748,000 hundredweights and they were worth $6,345,000 to fishermen. Two points are to be kept in mind; one is that unrevised figures are given in all cases, and revision would make some changes but not enough to alter the general outline of the record. The second point to be remembered is that this record covers sea fisheries results only. The Dominion has important freshwater fisheries but they are not dealt with here.

This year, as shown by the reports made to the Dominion Department of Fisheries, all the sea fisheries provinces save New Brunswick showed increased landings in the six months ending at the close of June, and the New Brunswick decrease was comparatively small. On the other hand, however, two provinces, Nova Scotia and British Columbia, get the credit for bringing about the net gain in landed value. In the other sea fisheries provinces the value of the catches at points of landing decreased—approximately $5,000 in the case of Quebec, $60,000 in Prince Edward Island, and $77,000 in New Brunswick.

Catch and landed value totals, by provinces, for the 1937 period were as follows, odd figures being dropped in all instances:

	Catch Cwts.
Nova Scotia	1,296,400
New Brunswick	635,500
Prince Edward Island	140,800
Quebec	407,500
British Columbia	685,000

	Landed Value $
Nova Scotia	3,658,200
New Brunswick	877,200
Prince Edward Island	460,600
Quebec	421,600
British Columbia	1,301,100

THREE O'CLOCK A. M.

'Tis not of yesterday, nor yet tomorrow,
This pivot of the night—
An hour when stricken heart renew their sorrow
And hope is poised for flight.

How many a patient sufferer wakes to pain
While still the darkness lowers,
Knowing his laggard steps must trace again
The gantlet of the hours.

The world is hushed, the very wheels at rest
That kept me company;
Only my thoughts like an unwelcome guest
Must still remain with me.

Well may we pray, as children would,
Thy Lord our souls to keep
He who bestows on ill as well as good
The blessedness of sleep.

If I be lonely who have warmth and light,
Free from the haunt of fears,
I do not fail of pitying the plight
Of those in chains or tears.

Prisoners of pain—and pain of greater power
Than mine! Where'er you stay,
May you escape the burden of this hour
In night's eclipse of day.

BELLEVILLE FAIR IS NOW IN FULL SWING and with favorable weather should make a record this year. The officers have worked hard to make the 1937 Fair memorable for excellence in every department and have been rewarded with the very finest of exhibits and plenty of them. Every class is filled and the excellence of the exhibits promises keen competition and hard work for the judges. A day at Belleville Fair promises entertainment of a high order and interesting moments inspecting the various exhibits. There is something interesting for every taste at Belleville Fair and an education in viewing the superior products of factory, field, forest, farm, mine, dairy, cattle, horses, sheep, swine, etc., of the Bay of Quinte.

x x x

BELLEVILLE SHOULD LOOK ITS BEST THIS WEEK while we are entertaining hundreds of Fair visitors. Flags and bunting should be generously displayed and all citizens on their toes to prove what a prosperous and progressive city we have—also the advantages to our neighbors around about for a hundred miles or more of making this their business centre.

x x x

IT PAYS TO SHOP IN BELLEVILLE—a visit to the splendid stores proves that assertion.

x x x

EVERY YEAR AT BELLEVILLE FAIR one of the finest and most visited displays is that of T. W. Bamford, market gardener, in the Horticultural Building. The display of flowers and vegetables is simply amazing and anyone at all interested in flowers, fruits and vegetables can not help but be greatly pleased with this showing which is one of the brightest spots of the Fair.

x x x

PUMPKIN PIE IS A FAVORITE WITH MOST FOLKS who like pie, and who don't like pie? Hence pumpkin pie epicures at Belleville Fair will get an eyeful when they glimpse Sam Munnings' exhibit of two Jumbo fied pumpkins which weigh 150 pounds. Mr. Munnings has earned a wide reputation for floral cultivation as well as vegetables.

x x x

OTTAWA BOYS' BAND, one of the finest musical organizations in Canada, will give a concert at Belleville Fair Wednesday afternoon, and this promises to be one of the highest features of this year's entertainment. This organization has been heard with pleasure over the radio by thousands in this district who will no doubt take this opportunity of a close-up and attend Belleville Fair Wednesday afternoon.

x x x

WRESTLING AS A FINE ART will be exemplified at Belleville Fair, the mat being spread in the open, on the elevated stage opposite the grand stand, as a thrilling close to the evening's entertainment, Wednesday and Friday. Those who have never witnessed the modern technique of the wrestling art should take this opportunity of seeing this sport at the fair at its best and all must admit that the show is always worth the money.

MAY BE RECALLED

Though he has already arrived in Tokio to take over the position of British ambassador to Japan, Sir Robert Craigie (above) may be recalled to London before presenting his credentials to the Japanese government. Great Britain, incensed over the wounding of Sir Hughe Knatchbull-Hugessen, when a Japanese aviator machine-gunned the road along which he was driving, may withdraw her ambassador though not breaking off diplomatic relations. Sir Robert Craigie was recently appointed to his new post and arrived in Tokio during the crisis.

Children's Day Opens Fair; Weather Favors Exhibition

"Big Year For The Fair" Prediction of Official

TRACK IS FAST

It's Children's Day at the Belleville Fair Grounds today and one hundred busses even in the past have been the detachment of firemen of the local department, stationed with their red trucks ostensibly for the checking of any minor blaze which might occur, but in reality acting as blue-coated watchmen and protectors of very small young children, contentedly but bewilderedly licking a lollipop and thoroughly lost in the maze of buildings, tents and booths.

A sudden period of hasty bawls in the midst of their tangled wanderings, final recovery and return in their companions after brief travail.

"First day indications, and the atmosphere that is already evidenced by visitors and exhibitors alike could give us authority to say that it will be a big year for the fair at Exhibition," said the secretary, E. H. Ketcheson, of the Fair Board, this morning when queried. "Everything is running smoothly."

Little Feller In First

First person to enter the Belleville Fair Grounds probably a "little feller" it was stated by the main gate-keeper this morning.

One of the bunches of little fellows walking hastily up to open up this morning," it was added.

The track is fast and clean. We've never had it in better condition," stated Mr. Harry Ketcheson in charge of this end of today's amusements, after a close survey of the sprinkled oval. "The race will be a humdinger for horse races at least," he reflected.

Poultry Noisy

Chickens and geese and loudly quacking ducks, scrappy bantam roosters, flashy peacocks and turtlenecked turkeys. This division of the Fair will not be the least interesting one to visitors.

The poultry exhibit was noisy this morning but exhibits will be well placed by the afternoon, engineers promised Jack Holiby, in charge of this division.

Dairy Exhibition

An approximate total of thirty of the county's finest cheese had been received up to noon today on the Fair Grounds for judging expected to be held tomorrow. This year again the exhibits are housed in a large tent.

Along with the largest entry of stock race horses ever recorded at any fair, this year's exhibition of cattle will also surpass previous records, late arrivals of the blooded bovines this morning were placed in the tent, the limit of space at both ends of the long cattle sheds. Hasty measures were taken this morning to shade the animals from the hot sun in the uncovered sections.

Missing Children Advise

"And," said Fire Chief Lyons as he shouldered another tiny bawling toe cream cone splashed child and set it down on the pavement, "if any parents of the missing mother at 11.45 this morning, "if the parents of any fathers would look here first for the missing children at the side of the Dominion Building, I'm pretty likely some one has brought the child here. We've had several today but all recovered."

Sam C. Wright is Honored By Fellow Employees on The Eve of His Retirement

Popular Station Agent Tendered Address And Gift

48 YEARS' SERVICE

On the first day of November, 1937, Sam C. Wright, one of Belleville's summers strolled in the railway station at Baden, Ont., and announced to the station master that he was ready for work. He was assigned to a desk and given the position of assistant station agent.

Slowly he scratched some figures on a sheet of paper. And with those few marks began a long, active and useful career, one marked by efficiency, a strict application to duty and a loyalty to employers that is rarely seen. For forty-five years Mr. Samuel C. Wright held down his job, flitting around the smaller places of the system as official capacity, never complaining, but performing his duties in a manner which soon gained for him the reputation of being one of the most valuable officers in the service of his company. Today, Mr. Wright lays down the baton of office for good. Today he will bid adieu to his fellow railwaymen in the Canadian National Railway station at Belleville, while we have been privileged to work with you for only a small part of your railroad career, have always found you considerate and tolerant, and we will always look back on this period with pleasant memories of the happy relations that have existed between us.

"On this occasion we thought it fitting that we should give some tangible expression of our regard for you, and would ask you to accept this gift, which we trust you will find useful, also that it may serve as a pleasant reminder of the pleasant days which fell to his lot in the latter years of his period of service.

That the knowledge gained in former transfers stood him in good stead is seen in the fact that for twenty-two years he was employed at Corbyville, one of the busiest points on the line. From there he was transferred to Belleville where for the past five and one half years he has performed his duties in a splendid manner. His personality, gruff though it was, made a host of associates with many of whom has endeared him to all with whom he has come in contact.

Of a quiet unassuming nature he discharged his duties in a manner that "spoke" quiet efficiency. His mannerisms and ability to gain for himself the affection and co-operation of his fellow employees, his kindly geniality to all he met while in the line of duty has earned him the friendship of a host of old and laborers alike. He will be greatly missed by his fellow employees in Belleville.

Fellow Employees' Tribute

Appreciation of the splendid qualities of Mr. Wright was shown in a tangible manner by his fellow employees, yesterday when on the eve of his departure from active service they tendered him an address of appreciation accompanied by a purse with the hope that it would serve as a pleasant reminder of the years spent in pleasant association. The address as presented to Mr. Wright follows:

"The relentless march of time has brought us, regretfully, to the time when we must sever our relationship with you as Agent. We, the members of your staff at Belleville, while we have been privileged to work with you for only a small part of your railroad career, have always found you considerate and tolerant, and we will always look back on this period with pleasant memories of the happy relations that have existed between us.

"On this occasion we thought it fitting that we should give some tangible expression of our regard for you, and would ask you to accept this gift, which we trust you will find useful, also that it may serve as a pleasant reminder of the pleasant days which we have worked together.

"In conclusion, we join in wishing for yourself and Mrs. Wright, many years of health and happiness, now you have retired."

Seen this morning at his office in the Canadian National Railway freight shed, Mr. Wright was busy dispensing pay checks to members of his department. Quietly and modestly he performed his duties. He had a smile for every visitor. Occasionally an employee reached over the desk and quietly shook hands, a silent gesture of farewell to a beloved colleague.

Mr. Wright made any definite plans as to where I will spend my retirement," Mr. Wright told the Ontario Intelligencer, "but I will remain in Belleville for some time at least."

His successor, Mr. F. H. Bolte stood quietly in the background renewing acquaintances among the "old timers" for twenty seven years ago he worked as an operator in the local yard office.

Mr. Bolte came to Belleville with years of railway experience behind him. Thirty five years ago he joined the service, spending a number of years in the Montreal division of the company. He was transferred to Lynn Junction, Ont., where he performed his duties faithfully and efficiently for a period of twenty-two years. Since then Mr. Bolte has worked in several parts of Ontario. A few years ago he was transferred to Conacon, Ont., and last year took over the duties as Stoonfield from which point he came to Belleville.

A veteran in railroad circles, Mr. Bolte has taken sufficient time off to satisfy his appetite for sport. He has managed with success many hockey and baseball teams and not a few championships were won through the managerial ability of Mr. Wright's successor. He received a warm welcome from his fellow employees today, and he takes over his new duties in an atmosphere of friendliness and co-operation that augurs well for the future of his particular department.

LEAVE DOOR OPEN FOR A REUNION

A. F. of L. Decide Informally Not to Expel C. I. O. Unions

Atlantic City, N.J., Aug. 30 (AP)—American Federation of Labor heads on have decided informally to leave the door open for a reunion with John L. Lewis' C.I.O.

This was learned today in well-informed circles while the Federation's executive council started the second week of its meeting.

Council members decided informally not to expel the 119 C.I.O. unions they suspended last Sept. 39, in answer to a demand from a few unions that they serve the last bond between Lewis and the A.F. of L.

These council members it was learned, felt there was no use locking the door as long as there was any chance for a reunion. Some of them felt that the Lewis revolt was only a phase in the development of the American labor movement and that, some time, the movement would be reunited.

The council suspended the C.I.O. unions last September for "insurrection" in setting up the Committee for Industrial Organization. Lewis and associates set up the C.I.O. to bring all the workers in each big industry into one big union, without regard to traditional A.F. of L. craft lines.

Dumping of Tomato Refuse in Lake Annoys Wellington Citizens

Blood-red water flowing in from Lake Ontario gave the residents and summer tourists of Wellington a scare last week. Closer scrutiny revealed the "color" to be the refuse from local canning factories which started tomato canning operations last week. Thousands of tomato skins and other refuse washed up on the sandy beach, giving it a distinctly scarlet appearance.

Indignant residents and tourists immediately filed a petition of protest with the village council. Reeve Arthur Goodnough took immediate action with the result that the refuse is now being dumped in other places than the waters of the lake.

NON-AGGRESSION PACT WITH SOVIET

China to Benefit by New Treaty Against Japan

Nanking, Aug. 30.—(AP) —China today looked to her, new non-aggression treaty with Soviet Russia to strengthen the Chinese position in the conflict with Japan.

China and Russia announced conclusion of the pact forewearing war as an instrument of policy between the two nations and promising not to aid any third power which might commit aggression against one of the signatories.

The agreement did not obligate Russia to come to the aid of China in the present trouble with Japan but some Chinese professed to see hope. Direct material aid might come from Russia if the Chinese army reaches the point of exhaustion in the current conflict.

The announcement of conclusion of the pact indicated that it was only an evidence of moral support and sympathy from the Soviets.

Observers saw in the rapprochement with Russia a move similar to China's resumption of diplomatic relations with Russia in 1931 when Japanese forces were detached Manchuria to set up the Japanese-dominated state of Manchoukuo.

ONTARIO CHIEF JUSTICE OPENS C. N. E.

Watched by thousands of first-day visitors to the Canadian National Exhibition, Hon. N. W. Rowell, Chief Justice of Ontario, officially opened the fair by pushing an electric button, automatically opening the huge gates. Justice Rowell is shown (above) during the ceremony. Officials of the exhibition are hoping for a record attendance of 2,000,000 persons.

FAMED FINANCIER DIES

One of the richest men in the world and former United States secretary of the treasury, Andrew W. Mellon (above) died at the home of his son-in-law on Gin Lake near Southampton, N.Y. Mellon served in the cabinets of three United States presidents and was 82 years of age. At the time of his death he was awaiting a decision by the United States board of tax appeals on the government's suit to collect $3,075,104 which treasury officials claim he owed in income taxes for 1931. Born in Pittsburg, he grew up among big business and at 25 was president of pittsburg bank. T. Mellon and Sons, which later became the Mellon National Bank.

Broken Collarbone Result of Fall

Point Ann, Aug 30 (Special) — Crashing to the bottom of a flight stairs at her home here, Charlotte, small daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Bennett, suffered a fractured collarbone late Saturday afternoon.

Medical help was summoned and the injured girl treated. Her condition today was regarded as satisfactory.

LEGLESS SWIMMER COMPLETES COURSE

New York, Aug. 30 (AP)—Legless Charlie Zimmy completed his 145-mile swim down the Hudson River from Albany last night in an elapsed time of approximately 148 hours. A swift ebb tide whisked him away from the 125th Street pier where he intended to land and a police launch was dispatched to bring him to shore.

The legless swimmer finally fought his way to shore at 98th Street, more than a mile down river from his intended landing place.

HON. PAUL LEDUC NAMED CANDIDATE

Will Conduct Liberal Campaign in Eastern Ontario

Ottawa, Aug. 30 (CP)—Leading the Liberal campaign in Eastern Ontario, Hon. Paul Leduc, Provincial Attorney General, was named candidate for East Ottawa at a party convention here Saturday.

The Hepburn Government, Mr. Leduc told his audience, had done more for the workingmen than any previous administration. He cited various items of social legislation passed by the Provincial Government, naming the Standard Wages Act and the Minimum Wage Act.

"It is the Government's intention to introduce Unemployment Insurance," the Attorney-General said. He continued: "It was claimed the Hepburn Government was opposed to labor unions. That is untrue. We recognize the right of laborers to organize but what we oppose is any interference by outsiders in our labor problems. Sit-down strikes or any other illegal novelties imported from other countries will be severely dealt with."

Herring Throng Nets As Fishermen Face Shortage Raw Salt

Halifax, Aug. 30 (CP)—A riot in the far-off Bahamas and collapse of a wharf in Halifax appeared unconnected, but to the fishermen of Devil's Island, at the mouth of Halifax harbor, the two incidents combined to form a serious obstacle to their fishing success this season.

In Halifax, some weeks ago, a wharf collapsed, carrying with 200 tons of salt into the harbor. Rioting in the Bahamas caused cancellation of a shipment to Halifax and it will be more than a month before a new order can be delivered from Turk's Island, principal source of raw salt for fishing on this portion of the Atlantic coast.

During this week-end, record shoals of herring thronged into the nets of the Devil's Island fishermen. They crowded so thick that in some case the nets and floats were sunk, and salvaged with difficulty. The fishermen, with only a small supply of salt, were forced to throw back the greater part of the catch.

COMPLETE CROP BURNED

Woodstock, Ont, Aug. 30—(CP)—Loss estimated at $5,000 was caused today by fire which destroyed a large barn on the farm of Eric Pick, two miles west of Norwich village.

Destroyed with the barn was the season's crop of 11,000 bushels of oats and several hundred bushels of old grain, 60 tons of hay, machinery, seven pigs and 450 chickens. The loss was partly covered by insurance. Cause of the fire has not been determined.

"Look back, but don't turn back!"

Overheard at the beach

Blue suit: . . . yes, I know. But why don't people ever learn from experience!

Brown suit: We've never tried exactly this beverage room system before . . .

Blue suit: No, but it's the agitators and the people who believe them without knowing the facts who never seem to learn. Look back, and you'll see that prohibition has never worked . . . it has always caused evils greater than the ones it sought to correct.

Brown suit: Perhaps, but things aren't perfect now?

Blue suit: Of course there are a few people who go to extremes. But just because of that we don't have to turn right back into the hands of the bootleggers! People are going to drink, you know. And the way to get moderation is to make the drinking of small quantities of mildly stimulating beverages both legal and public!

Brown suit: But what about these people who don't know when to stop?

Blue suit: Laws won't change these people. But in time education will reduce their number, stop young people growing up in their footstepe. That's why I say: look back at history but don't turn back and make all those mistakes over again. And that's why I say: the Brewing Industry is doing a fine thing in urging true temperance education!

This advertisement is inserted by the Brewing Industry in the interest of a better public understanding of certain aspects of the problems of temperance and local option.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was suppose to go downtown with ma this afternoon on account of me needing a new pair of shoes and I was saying, May ma, if we wait till next week to get my shoes they'll be bran new when we get them instead of a worn old already.

If you didn't need new shoes this very moment I'd be glad to wait till next year to buy them if possible, with the cost of living and the depression where they both still are, and now dont diffydadily, I dont want to have to wait for you, ma said, and I said, out jimminy, ma, the payments may still be wet after the rain.

We'll be brave and take our chances, ma said.

And we started to walk to the trolley car, and the payments was almost dry but not quite, giving me a idea, and I thawt, O, if I accidently stepped on one of those loose looking bricks and it squerted mud all over my stockings ma would be ashamed to be saw walking with me and she'd leave me stay home.

And I started to try to tread on every slapicious looking brick I saw, ma saying, Will you do me the favor of trying to walk like a scher person?

Meaning strate, which I did for a while missing a lot of important looking bricks, and then I started reaching for them again without making any of them squert mud, and ma said, Are you going to put one foot in front of the other like a retional human bean, or do have to give you a smack to teach you obedience?

Yes mam, no mam, ma, I said.

Meaning yes I was and no she didn't have to, and just then I tread on a innocent looking brick that I couldn't help treading on and it squerted mug on my shoe and I showed it to ma and she wasn't even intristed.

Proving when you need new shoes you mite as well leave nature take its course.

Wedding Reception

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My boy friend has invited me to his cousin's wedding reception. As I am not acquainted with any of his family, I do not know whether or I should go. What do you think?

J.—If you what shall I say when I am introduced to the bride and groom?

J.—Do I have to take a gift?

O.

J.—I am sure that your hesitation about going alone, as it should, from the fact that you have not received a direct invitation. Any of us would hesitate about just "appearing" at a wedding reception on such an indirect invitation. But it is easy enough to explain to your boy friend that you would be delighted to go if he will have his cousin send you an invitation, or indicate in some way directly that she would like to have you present. You needn't be the slightest embarrassed about asking for this invitation. It will be only too glad to ask for it, will respect you for your right social attitude, and his cousin will be delighted to send you an invitation. Everything will be fine and "in order."

J.—When you meet the bride, give your your "best wishes" for her happiness, and don't forget to thank her for her invitation. You want to thank you so much for your kind invitation; to your reception. It was so nice of you to ask me to come with George. And may I add that I wish you every happiness for your happiness? It is a lovely wedding and I am so happy to be here." You will be glad to be introduced to you, offer him your "best" congratulations. Remember that you don't offer "congratulations" to the bride!

J.—You don't take a gift to a wedding reception . . . If we give a wedding present we take it to the bride-to-be some time before the wedding—to her home.

Since you do not know the bride or groom, you needn't necessarily give a wedding gift. But, on the other hand, since you are going to the reception (I think), I would like to have you make some personal recognition of this occasion, which I am sure you will receive. So you might send a bunch of flowers to the bride-to-be on the morning of her wedding, or, if you wish to give something more substantial, you might send some simple gift, such as a half dozen of tea-napkins, or cocktail napkins, or a small rose-bowl vase, or white glass, or a piece of costume jewelry, something of that sort that would cost about two or three dollars, and that would show your friendliness and appreciation.

Flower Girl

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My sister is to have a church wedding next month. She is not going to wear a veil, and there will be just the best man as the groom's attendant, and myself as maid-of-honor. What we would like to know is whether it would be correct to have my small daughter as flower girl with that type of wedding?

F.

It should be the bride, not you or I, who should decide this question. I am sure that she has given much detail of her wedding plans.

Also there usually is not a flower girl at an informal wedding, but it is not at all incorrect to have the flower girl

TWEED GIRLS LOSE TO OTTAWA NINE

No Match For More Experienced Rivals, Lose 31 to 11

Tweed, Sept. 31.—(Special)—The local girls' softball team proved no match for their more experienced rivals from Ottawa on Saturday, although they were forced to accept an adverse count of 31 to 11. A small crowd was on hand as Ottawa girls made it two straight wins, when the first game in Ottawa by a score of 15 to 0. In justice to the locals it must be pointed out that their competition during the season has consisted of only four or five similar games which are of little value as preparation for a series with a team which plays regularly in an advanced league.

The first inning was a nightmare to the locals. The visitors scored nine runs before being relieved with Betten, players facing Peg Rashotte on the mound for Tweed. The visitors scored in every inning except the sixth. Leila Scott of Arden shared the mound duties with Peg Rashotte, each allowing an equal share of the hits and runs.

The Ottawa girls sponsored by Morrisburg Ferry are a smart well-balanced team with some capable hurlers and three equally good catchers. Their first baseman, Miss Labelle, is rated as the best player in the city and showed plenty of class at the initial sack. She led the scorers with five runs, a mark equalled by Miss Desarfio at short stop. Every player made at least one hit and scored at least one run. The Ottawa nine drew the men's teams a hard battle.

The locals scored two runs in each of the first two innings going scoreless until the end of the game when the visitors with the game safely tucked away eased up and permitted the homesters to push seven runs over the plate. Marion Tummon led the locals with four hits.

Line-ups:

Ottawa—Bonneville cf; Labelle 1b; Desarfio ss; Harrison 2b; Grenon rf; St. Lacasse 3b, cf; Paulin p; Shipclark c; Hill rf; Thompson cf; Dewey p; Lewis c.

Tweed—Scott 3b, rf; Marion Tummon 2b; Margaret Loiffman 1b; Ana Thompson c, lf; F. Graham rf; 2b; Marjorie Tummon cf; L. Reed ss, p; C. Long lf, c; P. Rashotte p.

Umpires—J. Kennedy, Ottawa, plate; "Tip" Tummon, Tweed, bases.

DOUBLES TENNIS TITLE IN FOREIGN HANDS

Brookline, Mass., Aug. 31 (AP)—The men's U.S. doubles tennis title is in foreign hands today for the first time in 18 years as a result of a straight set victory by Baron Gottfried Von Cramm and Henner Henkel of Germany over Wilmer Allison and Gene Mako, the Californian defending champions.

The German pair, ranked only 70 minutes yesterday to gain their first triumph in three starts against the Americans this season, by scores of 6-4, 6-4.

Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, who shared four previous women's titles, defeated Mrs. Helen Jacobs, 11th singles titalist, to defeat Mrs. Jacobs and Fabyan's fabulous Bay year's winners, 7-5, 6-4.

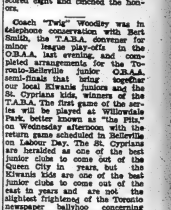
In order to speed up the harness racing at the Belleville Fair this week the race committee has adopted the 'every heat a race' plan of racing. This plan eliminates jockeying and makes the drivers step out and win in their turn, as their winnings are only based on their positions in each individual race, no race having any connection with another relative to the ultimate pay-off. As stated before this system speeds up the racing considerably and it should prove a boon to harness racing at heat. If the drivers would co-operate and assist by scoring in position for fast getaways, the harness racing would be much more popular in the eyes of the public. Harness racing in Belleville has always met with favour and with the fine stables of horses now training at the Fair Grounds, it looks like three gala days of racing for the Belleville Fair.

Clint Hodgins trainer and driver for the Hon. Earl Rowe's stable, features by Peter Chilcoat, arrived in the home centre at the Fair Grounds along with the well-known Bayville stables of Pentang, "Chappie" Chapman's stable, Leslie Bennett's quartette of mares and Doc Kay's with Elmer Lahare's Royal McKillop are only a few of the 38 harness horses that will compete in the daily races at the Belleville Fair commencing Wednesday. Incidentally Hon. Earl Rowe's crack pacer, Peter Chilcoat, broke the track record at Oshawa last week, turning the mile in 2.01 flat and at Arnworthy, the horse to chase Peter Chilcoat to the wire in Oshawa was Peter Boy, he was leading for a new track record in Belleville on Friday when these two clash in the free-for-all.

There will be two races every afternoon. Wednesday sees the 2.23 and 2.10 classes; Thursday the 2.25 and 2.16 classes and Friday the 2.19 and 2.10 or free-for-all classes. Trotters are to be a closer fire next onds in classification and all horses must be eligible on the 26th of the current year with Canadian National Racing rules to govern all races, with five to enter but four must start. Late last night there were 30 horses at the Fair grounds with all available space being used, some of the horses being stabled in cattle pens. All races should be filled and some keen racing seen.

Joe Louis may still be heavyweight champion of the world, but Tommy Farr, the Welsh coalheaver, not only made the proverbial monkey of the American sport writer, but gained a merited victory over the Brown Bomber last night. Farr took Louis' fancy punch on several occasions, did not give ground and was badly surprised all by his continued aggressiveness. If our eyes served us right over the radio, as the dailies was booed at the ringside. There is no doubt but Farr is the best opponent Louis has ever met, with the exception of Max Schmeling, the heavy "war" champion.

Last night's scrap was purely a battle of 'leftz', Louis using unable to cock his famous right, as Farr lashed out lightning-like lefts, that laid the champion open. Farr is undoubtedly one of the gamest fighters ever to enter the ring and a worthy opponent to meet any champion. He'll be back again, but next time Farr will command the respect of those who scoffed prior to his showing last night. The Welshman, weathering a bad beating in the middle rounds, came back to force the fight in the dying stages and win the respect of even blasé American fans. To-morrow Farr gained a moral victory last night.



Softball in Belleville rang down his curtain last night, founder at Provincial O.A.A. playdowns are completed. The Jajmen series ended up well two seven innings, but was marred by a ninth inning balloon when the Young Ukrainians, Nathan, Tom Graham, supplied the willow right here in Belleville and sent the ball into the East in Peterborough, the Carlton team decided to produce the much needed hits and runs and defeated Westeiar 7-2. As both games were of 5-inn. and each finishing game nature, the local squads were beaten out in the total number of runs in the O.A.S.A. hunt. May they enjoy the good fortune Belleville did last year, namely a Provincial title.

On the Coleman Flats the pitching staffs of Jack Kinch and Jerry' duel for seven frames, as "Cox" Young and Jack Kimball looked up in a sterling and sensational battery exhibition, only to have the visiting Ukrainian boys forge their wa break out with three successive hits, three runs and victory, followed by Gilbert and N. Hrynak, and continued their slow but sure laying of timber in the eighth, when they scored eight and clinched the honors.

Coach "Twig" Woodley was in telephone conversation with Earl Rowe, Provincial Secretary, down for minor league play-offs in the O.A.S.A. last evening, and completed arrangements for the Toronto-Belleville junior O.B.A.A. semi-final that will decide which our local Kiwanis juniors and the Toronto Kiwanis will meet in the T.A.B.A. The first game of the series will be played in Belleville, best under known as "the Pile," on Wednesday afternoon with the return game slated to be played on Labour Day. The St. Cyprians are regarded as one of the best junior clubs to come out of the Queen City for some years and Kiwanis kids are one of the best junior clubs to come out of the east in years. Both clubs are the slightest frightening of the Toronto newspaper publicity concerning their opponents. Incidentally in Toronto, the junior finals of the O.B.A.A. will officiate with two qualified umpires from this district calling the bases for the games.

Eddie Collette, former Detroit International Hockey League star and a member of the Pacific Coast League flash, is a member of the Jackie Burke, Jr. golf team that is appearing at the Belleville Fair. Incidentally Eddie and "Toots" Holway, rival stars for years, find quite a fanning bee today. For the information of those interested in Jackson Bros. shows came directly to Belleville from the Canadian Exhibition, Quebec, and have not played in Ontario for four years.

Minus two of the better players, catcher Clarence Tuttle and second baseman Teddy Kenn, the Corbin Locks were rubbed out of the O. A. S. A. picture at Peterboro last evening when the Westclox won a third and decisive game 7-3. The Corbins just couldn't get the much needed hits in the clinches.

ONCE HERO, NOW?

Farr's Gameness Cheered But Brown Bomber Retains World Heavyweight Crown

Referees And Two Judges Are Unanimous in Their Decision

DECISION BOOED

Eight Rounds Given to Louis, Five to Farr And Two Even

(By Stan Robertson, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Aug. 31 (CP)—Joe Louis still wears his World Heavyweight Championship robes today, slightly ragged about the edges as they were, but Tonypandy Tommy Farr of Wales held all the glory after their 15 round clash here last night.

As the end of the 45 minutes of rugged fighting—at least 30 minutes more than 90 per cent of the "experts" expected there would be—the referee and two judges were unanimous in giving the decision to the dusky champion.

However, as the announcer lifted Louis' tired right hand with the shout, "and the winner and still champion"—a vast majority of the crowd of 27,000 sent a thunder of boos swirling down about the ring that left no doubt in the minds chairman of the British Empire had won their hearts with his gallant stand.

The British bulldog with the honey-colored hair stood the experts on their heads and the fans on their seats by often carrying the fight to the heavy clouting champion and by taking the few dynamite charges Joe was able to explode and coming back for more.

Louis Favored at 7 to 1

In the eyes of an American fight public ready to scoff at British boxing after seeing the Beckettz and Scotts, the spectacle bordered on the unbelievable.

Farr, the 1 to 7 shot in the betting, rushing into the face of the colored boy's feared guns to take toe to toe and exchange punches on the body and head was amazed enough. But when the final round came and the orthodox critics from Wales went charging headlong into the brawler and still still punching champion to coiscore and out-bully him, the sight swept the crowd off their feet.

At the end, the cheers for Farr of the defeated were greater by volume than the mingling of cheers and great volume of derisive shouts for the winner and champion.

Lose Sight of Facts

However, those who hooted at the negro may have lost sight of the actual facts of the fight in their wonderment at the courage and craftiness of the white man. For the great majority of writers at the ringside agreed with the officials in awarding the decision to the Welshman.

Joe's lightning left hand was sharp as it ever was and it left spills and bloodied the Welshman's face ill crumbled up points steadily as the fight progressed, found the shaken, bobbing target no more than six times, but it was labelled "knockout" every time and a less durable man than Farr would have beaten the resin dust.

The consensus of ringsiders was that Louis took eight rounds, and Farr five, with the other two even.

Like the champion, Tough Tommy piled up most of his points with a good left hand that also was charged with a bit of lightning, if not an abundance of power. The British challenger found his range and then sent solid crashes, but there wasn't a knockout drop in the scrapper either.

The fight failed to provide a single knockdown. Both men came out of it with injured right hands, but this did not seem to matter. In fact neither was off his feet in 15 rounds that often were furious. Farr simply did not bowl his man over because he did not have the necessary punch. Joe, for his part, could, and he loosed several shots that could have been haymakers. However, the Tonypandy thumper was too nimble. He darted away from most stiff shots and weaved under others. His head rolled with some of the champion's hardest smashes and throttled their steam.

He Match in Punching

All of which seemed to add up to the conclusion, that the Brown Bomber can not explode his bombs on an opponent who can move fast and think at the same time. Farr could never hope to match Louis in power of punching and but he was far quicker of foot and he was able to out-general the champion, especially in the third and seventh rounds, when Joe fired from both ports.

The hardy young Briton held his ground well and his head high through the first session, but in the third the Louis lefts, that smashed into his scarred face with trip-hammer regularity started slowing right hand cahrges flush on Tommy's chin and punishment was telling. Still expecting his foe to tumble.

Then in the fourth round, under the left eye masked the Welshman's face. But he battled only a second, then changed in looping a right and left to the negro's kinky topped head as the bell sounded.

Hit Hard in Seventh

Again in the seventh it seemed the British champion must bow his knee before Joe's might. A crushing right to America's left opened a fresh gash under Tommy's right eye. His head jerked back as the willing Welshman's chin. Another series of lefts, then another right crashed home and British titleholder hesitated only momentarily before winging back at the New York bombardier.

Louis also has a raw and rounded eyed reaped from the battle but there wasn't much doubt that the Brown ex-Bomber deserved toe decision.

He did, as badly scared as he looked in spots. He was also almost as dumb as a dime detective most of the evening and he took a few chances that paid first and last. He never learned how to fight Farr, He is the better man, and Tonypandy Tommy will be the last to deny it. Tommy didn't deny it last night even as he sat and tried to look out between battered eyelids and listened to the "decisions" that echoed and re-echoed across Yankee Stadium after Louis had been declared the winner.

Tonypandy, Wales, August 31 (AP)—A high, lonely flame on Tonypandy Mountain today celebrated the strangest scene ever inspired by a prizefighter.

It had been arranged that the bonfire should be touched off after Tommy Farr, Tonypandy's own, should win his fight with Joe Louis in New York—he lost—but the bonfire flared just the same.

The manner of his losing was no magnificent and the pride of his townspeople so deep that 3,000 miners and their weeping wives thronged the steep slopes of the law just before dawn and touched off the fire of "victory."

In the flickering flamelight over the desolate, coal-pitted valley of Rhondda Fawr, the Welshmen sang @ only Welshmen sing, "Land of Our Fathers."

Echoed Down the Valley

The music echoed down in the dreary valley where half the men are on the Dole and the other half earn the equivalent of $12.50 a week in the mines.

"In fervent was the song, so intense were the coal-smudged faces that it was difficult to comprehend the significance of the gathering. It seemed like a solemn religious ceremony.

Miners all over the valley had waited for sight of the bonfire as a signal of victory. When the flames burst, little bands in other communities alerted up the slopes of their own hills and soon fires blazed every pinnacle for miles before the fight Tonypandy was tense. Court Street, where Tommy lived when he was a pit boy, was decked with flags and one large banner said, "Tommy Farr—Our Champion."

Those who had tickets went to Judge's Hall for singing and dadding which lasted until the broadcast of the fight started early today. Others spilled through the streets.

ST. KITTS OVERCOME MARLBOROS BY 14-10

Toronto, Aug. 31.—(CP)—St. Catharines Athletics won supremacy in the fight for the Ontario Amateur Senior Lacrosse playdowns as a result of their victory last night over Toronto Marlboros by a score of 14-10. Athletics had the edge before the game by their win over the Toronto on Friday last, and with two victories in a row forced Marlboros out of the title hunt.

St. Catharines' victory was well earned, and except for the second and last quarters, they outplayed and outchecked their rivals. The Saints scored seven goals, Tertles who beat Brampton 10-8 in the second game of their series.

RABID BATTLING FOR GOOD SPOTS

Baltimore, Buffalo And Rochester After Last Spot

(By The Associated Press)

The most rabid battling of the International League season has been reserved for the finish part of the season and with fourth place as the goal. After a runaway pennant chase three clubs, Baltimore, Buffalo and Rochester are settling down to a catch-as-catch-can battle for the last playoff post.

Baltimore Orioles but last Sinons and Wings are not far behind. While the Orioles have a slight cliff on the Sinons shaded second-place Montreal Royals, 3-2, and the Wings lopped Toronto, 4-3.

The Herd snapped out of a loss-ing streak at Newark as Dutch Lesh behind Ken- Ash. Ash making his first start after a long rest, allowed only six hits and struck out the same number.

The Bisons scored the winning marker in the eighth, when Ed. Chapman drove back second on a sacrifice and scored, when Bud Mafry manhandled Eddie Phillips' single.

Red Wings' win extended the Maple Leafs' losing streak to eight straight. Herb Moore shaded Babe Davis in a pitching duel although each rookie allowed nine hits.

The Newark Bears' contest with Syracuse will be played at a later date while a Jersey City-Baltimore game was played earlier in the season.

Sports Roundup

(By Eddie Briett)

New York, Aug. 31.—(AP)—Boys, paste this one in your Kellys: fight expecting is gone forever. . . .

Tommy Farr, the surprising gent from Wales, saw to that. . . .

That big crash you heard along about 11.15 p.m. was the W.K. limb going down with all experts aboard.

The scribes are a shame-faced lot today . . . Some of the sock-of-towners are afraid to go home. . . . Joe Jacobs, manager of Max Schmeling, rubbed it in hard . . . "All them experts", he gabbed contemptuously, "should of went to bed" . . . Anyway, Farr gave 'em a licking even if he couldn't quite get past Joe Louis . . . So we hold the telegrams of ridicule in one hand and reach for the headache powders with the other.

Louis looked bad. . . . for a while the fans told themselves he surely was heading back for an opening. . . . But as the fight lasted and Farr piled points, Joe couldn't find an opening against the teasing bobbing, weaving style of the Britisher . . . Louis admitted after the fight he was able to land only one good punch. . . . Max schmeling again was "Somedinis".

Several times between rounds it looked like a pushover for Louis was about to cry. . . . Reports in Farr's dressing room said Tommy had bet money on himself—$2,500 to 1 to 1 and 7 to 3 that he would win . . . At that rate, he broke even.

New York Giants Lead Loop A Trio of McGraw Men Being Mainspring of Great Offensive

Terry, Ott And Hubbell Conspicuous in Recent Rise

DEFEAT REDS

Detroit Cuts Lead of Yankees by One Full Game

(By SID FEDER)

(Associated Press Sports Writer)

Old John McGraw, who's probably managing a pennant winner in whatever Valhalla baseball moves on to, looked down on his New York Giants today and found the view well might perfect.

They were leading the National League—by a margin little as a game, but leading nevertheless—and it was a trio of McGraw men, who labored over the club before that way.

First there was Bill Terry, who can take a bow, himself, for the manner he's handled the reins since old Jawn gave them up in '32. There there was Master Melvin Ott, the veteran youngster of the Polo Grounds, the little fellow who lifts up his front foot, swings at those high heard ones, and pounds them where they do the most good—for his side.

And last, but far from least, there was King Carl Hubbell, the master of the screwball, who won the first flinger with the greatest set of pitching brains in the game.

On Way to Pennant

These three, and the fight that was McGraw has put into the Giants, made it appear today that old man's spirit was on the way to their second straight pennant, their third under Terry. At the moment, they were the statistics as the two clubs still in the red-hot pennant parade:

	W.	L.	%	GB.
Giants	71	48	.597	IF
Cubs	72	47	.605	35

Yesterday, with the Cubs idle, the Giants had a chance to go into the lead. All they needed was the chance. They turned the trick with a 4-3 decision over the Cincinnati Reds, and that's where McGraw's boys came in.

Of course, there's a lot of help from Terry's new Terriers. But Ott, who batted in two runs against Binns and Wings are not far behind. While the Orioles have a slight cliff on the Sinons shaded second-place Montreal Royals, 3-2, and the Wings lopped Toronto, 4-3.

The Herd snapped out of a losing streak at Newark as Dutch Lesh behind Ken- Ash. Ash making his first start after a long rest, allowed only six hits and struck out the same number.

The Bisons scored the winning marker in the eighth, when Ed. Chapman drove back second on a sacrifice and scored, when Bud Mafry manhandled Eddie Phillips' single.

Red Wings' win extended the Maple Leafs' losing streak to eight straight. Herb Moore shaded Babe Davis in a pitching duel although each rookie allowed nine hits.

The Newark Bears' contest with Syracuse will be played at a later date while a Jersey City-Baltimore game was played earlier in the season.

LOUIS NOT THE SAME SAYS SCHMELING AT END OF SECOND ROUND

New York, Aug. 31.—(AP)—Max Schmeling said it as early as the second round.

"He is not more the same Louis."

At the time, though Tommy Farr, the tough Welsh from Tonypandy was cuffing the fuseless brown bomber up against the ropes, he seemed a sad statement. Louis hadn't warmed up, hadn't had time to size up his man.

But as the fight progressed, and Tommy, blood dripping from his nose and gashes under both eyes, stubbornly refused to buckle under the world beater, Louis showed his best licks, it looked better and better.

At no point throughout the surprising 15 rounds that the fight lasted did Max appear impressed by the man he belied out in 12 rounds a year ago last June. At the bout's end, when Louis' hand was raised in token of victory, he was impressed rather by the gameness of the Welsh miner, who had gone into the ring an even-money shot to last less than six rounds.

"That Farr", said Schmeling, whose rugged good looks are marred only slightly by his battle-scars—too puffed eyebrows and a dented nose—"He las a good, tough fighter. He fought a brave fight. But you cannot say he is the fighter I. If he only could punch . . .

STONEY LONESOME STILL IN RACE

Defeat Trent Cottons 9-8 to Pull Even in Mercantile Series

Trenton, August 31 (Special)—Even if they don't win Stoney Lonesome softball nine are bound and bent to give Trent Cottons the battle of their lives for the Mercantile League mug. Last night before a big crowd of mighty loyal supporters the Lonely gang turned defeat into victory and pulled the men from the mill 9 to 8 in a game that was batted on almost all its frames. In the third frame, although the score stood 11 to 0 in favour of Stoney Lonesome at the time the contest was stopped by chief umpire Charlie Ellis the official count was taken from the close of the fifth chapter. As in the four previous tilts the Cotton team made 'an early game splurge and they were headed for victory with runs when the third round commenced. The Lonesome crew pulled all but even with their opponents' command with a six run outburst in the first of the fifth session and tied the pastime with a pair of tallies in the seventh. Trent Cottons' opponents scored a point in the last of the third.

William Blight, who turned in a stellar performance in left field for Lonesome, was the man with the Lonesome winning point in the seventh frame. After fielding the centre field and being pushed home by a mate's smash, Blight came up with an off Cotcomen's bat and featured the contest. Garnet Bowden hit for the circuit in the last of the second.. Jesse Baker touched Medwick for right after Bowden and Drake plastered the pill far out into centre field for his homer in the last of the sixth.

Drive Misjudged

Incidentally it was Drake's drive that caused Hood to call the match. In the seventh Pindall, who very seldom misses, judged a fly ball that might have been easy for him in any practice lighting. After struggling through a terrific battle Cottons, in the first two stanzas Ernie Bowler, the Lonesome southpaw, pulled himself together and delivered fine ball. He gave up fourteen hits but fanned five and walked Burtt for twelve, but Burtt allowed six hits for seven bases, although he whiffed two to Bowler's three. Tonight Cole buries will start the scheduling and deciding fixture of the mercantile loop series.

AAJMAA JUNIORS LOSE 3RD GAME TO UKRAINIANS

Oshawa Club Win 15-6 And Proceed in The Playdowns

DEFENCE WEAKENS

Dracup And Carson Hit Hard in Closing Frames

With a barrage of extra base hits in the later innings, the Young Ukrainian Nationals of Oshawa rubbed the Bellevile Aajmaa Club out of contention in a third and deciding game of the second round junior O.A.S.A. playdowns at Coleman Flats last evening by the count of 15 to 6. An eight run spurge in the eighth inning assured the victors of the issue, as they blasted "Cox" Dracup, the Aajmaa hurler, for seven counters from the hilltop and continued to hit Lum Carson with gusto, as the Aajmaa hit the skids and went up like the proverbial balloon.

Mike Kupnicki, the Ukrainian hurler from Oshawa, out-pitched both Dracup and Carson, despite the fact that Aajmaa kids lead from the third until the seventh, when the visitors took a narrow margin advantage, six each, the pastime in the eighth. Kupnicki struck out the first batter walked two, while Dracup whiffed two and walked one in the seventh frame. The Oshawa nine hit the ball hard in the locals 18 to 11, many of the visitors' hits being for extra bases, including a triple by Shestowski and circuit blows by Olibert and N. Reynal. Every member of the visiting team counted at least one safe each and every stanza was treated and powerful batting rally.

Aajmaa Eliminated

The defeat eliminates the Aajmaas from further play in the province-wide series, although they are still eligible in the local city championship play-offs. Each team completed two fine double plays. The Oshawa nine won the game in the seventh, as only to have the Aajmaa kids score three runs to open the same. The visitors came back to score a couple of counters in their half and add two more in the eighth, the locals forged to the fore in the third with a double steal when Jack Moon and O'Neil hit in succession, to add two more scoring in eighth once, as Dracup and Kupnicki hooked up in a sterling pitchers' battle from the mound. Moon and stowski tripled and scored on Olibert's home run only to have N. Reynal skip to the plate and blast another circuit blow to put the visitors in the lead. Shestowski, many for extra bases and numerous hits, was the outstanding player. The box and Carson hit hard, when the Ukrainians pushed eight runs across the plate in their half of the eighth, while the locals scored one in the ninth. Moon, Adams, O'Neil and Reynolds looked the best for the locals. The young Ukrainian Nationals advance to the semi-finals of O.A.S.A. Junior semi-final by virtue of their victory last night.

The line-ups— Aajmaa Juniors — Newbrooks c; Adams 2b; Dracup or Amo 1f; Moon 1b; O'Neil cr; Reynolds rf; Topp 3b; Dracup and Carson, p. Young Ukrainian Nationals —Yorkevich c; Shestowski 2b; Olibert 3b; W. Hyrsak cf; J. Hyrsak If; Patterson rf; Opyohany ss; Scarnati 1b; Kupnicki, p.

CORBIN LOCKS OUSTED BY PETES IN FAST CONTEST

Score is 7-3 With Winners Coming From Behind

FIELDING POOR

Naish, Winning Hurler, Allows Only 8 Hits Well Scattered

Corbin Locks, Intermediate "A" entry in the O. A. S. A. Provincial playdowns were rubbed out of the picture on Monday evening at Peterboro when the Westclox won the third and deciding game in their series by a score of 7-3, the Lift Lock crew being full value for the win and having the best wishes of the defeated squad in their quest for Provincial honors.

Last year Johnny Bawden turned back practically the same team in the Provincial series but last night he did not receive the support that he should have and when the defence fell apart, the Westclox took advantage of the mistakes and attempted to a win Ted Naish, who was suspended last year for his run in with Dominion St. Derek, turned two wins for his club and was much the best on both occasions. The Corbins went ahead in the first frame, when they scored on Cooke's single, a sacrifice and a double by Reid but after that their bats were silenced effectively by Naish's hurling until the ninth, when they scored on a couple of hits with one down.

In 7n all they collected but nine hits and committed eight errors, enough to lose six? ball games.

Peterboro went ahead in the third frame with a two run splurge when Keans tripled, Ellis scratched a single and Kurrie doubled. Another two runs were scored in the sixth on solid hitting intermingled with bad errors on ground balls and the conquest was made complete with another two run outburst in the seventh, in all the Westclox collected thirteen hits and had only two errors neither of which appeared in the run-gelling for the losers. Bawden stuck out four to one by Naish. The lineups: Corbin Locks— Cooke, ss; Hiber, 3rd; Reid, 1st; Rigby, rf; Bawden, p; St. Louis, cf; Hanna, lf; Barrage, 2nd; Whaley, c.

Westclox: Peterboro—Downer, 3rd; P. Calladine, c; Starr, 2nd; W. Calladine, ss; Kearns, cf; O'Leary, lf; Ellis, 1st; Kurrie, rf; Walsh, p.

CHINESE CAPITAL, NANKING, TARGET FOR JAPANESE BOMBERS

An aerial view of the central portion of Nanking, capital and seat of China's central government which has been the target for Japanese bombing aeroplanes. General Pai Chung-hsi, Chinese military leader, who has been appointed Chief-of-Staff of the Central army has massed 200,000 soldiers five miles west of Shanghai for the greatest fight of the war, determined to defend Nanking to the last man. Giant bombing aeroplanes have raided the capital, dropping bombs on Marshal Chiang Kai-shek's military headquarters and starting many fires in the city. In the foreground is the building that houses the foreign affairs department.

ONTARIO MOVES TO COMBAT INFANTILE PARALYSIS OUTBREAK

With 219 cases already reported in the city of Toronto and with other areas, both urban and rural, noting more or less serious outbreaks from day to day, the Ontario provincial department of health took official cognizance of the prevalence or poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) in the province with a newspaper announcement to parents describing the nature, symptoms and preventive measures for the dread disease. While the outbreak was still officially regarded as below epidemic proportions, reopening of schools has been delayed two weeks in Toronto and one or two nearby centres, to minimize transmission of the virus. One precautionary measure which, while widely used, is still regarded as in the experiment stage, is being demonstrated at top left and lower right by Dr. John Hough of the Hagmeler Clinic, Preston, Ont., who is spraying the nasal passages of district children with a zinc sulphate solution to guard against infection. Use of the spray is based upon belief that infection may be contracted through the nose and throat; the treatment should be administered by a physician. At lower left and top right is pictured one little Toronto sufferer encased in the huge Drinker machine or "iron lung" at the Hospital for Sick Children. This machine has proved effective in continuing respiration and saving the lives of patients whose lungs have been attacked by the paralysis. The machine, by pumping and withdrawing air at a governed rate of speed, supplies artificial respiration to the patient.

IL DUCE VISITS SANATORIUM PATIENTS AFTER ARMY REVIEW

The well-known Fascist salute greeted Premier Mussolini, when he visited the sanatorium at Caniatte, Sicily. Il Duce is shown (above) as he passed through the solarium, visiting the women who are all "pucsia" of the Italian government. Mussolini made the sanatorium inspection after viewing army manoeuvres on the island.

SOCIAL CREDITORS EXPECTED TO JOIN OPPOSITION

Four Social Credit members of the Alberta legislature are rumored as intending to cross the floor of the legislature at the next session. The men shown who are expected to leave the Social Credit ranks are former portfolio holders in Premier Aberhart's cabinet, but who resigned or were dismissed, Hon. W. N. Chant (upper right), has taken issue with the premier on the control of banking in Alberta and has long been considered one of the "moderates" of the original Social Credit cabinet. Hon. O. C. Ross (upper left), former minister of lands and mines, is expected to cross the floor in the near future. — Hon. J. W. Hugill (lower left), attorney-general, many of whose legal acts have been declared ultra vires; and Hon. Charles Cockroft (lower right), former provincial treasurer, are also expected to join forces with the Social Credit opposition. The Alberta parliament building at Edmonton is shown in the centre photograph.

Physicians said they believed the pin could be removed without necessity of surgery or mechanical retraction. Photos show William with his nurse, Ruth Curry, and (inset) the open safety-pin in his stomach.

ALLEGED MURDERER UN CONCERNED OVER FATE

Showing little concern for his possible fate on a murder charge following the death of Sergeant Fred Davidson of the Sudbury police force, Tom Pormomarenko, alias Harry Shoke, is shown as he was returned to jail after appearing in court at Sudbury to face a preliminary hearing. Shoke was captured and a companion killed, when they were ambushed in a rock-cut near Spanish River, Ont. Shoke or his companion shot the officer when he attempted to question them about license plates on their automobile. With Shoke are Provincial Constable Jack Brown (left) and Sergeant Stan Wilson of the Sudbury police force.

MISSING GIRL

By Maryse Rutledge

Without another word they passed inward the hotel. Hand in hand of Beth, his black and white against her shimmering gold. Then they presented themselves, framed in the door between the living-room and porch, as the first rustle died away of guests finally settling at the small tables. Joe Lorna had been forced to give the signal to dine.

At the round table of honor, the place of the night waited for Tony, an empty gilt chair opposite for the mysterious young wife about whom there was so much talk. At a corner table, Mr. and Mrs. Howland had gathered around them a few older friends.

For the fraction of a second, Lorna lugs from her chair, stared at the two commanding figures in the doorway standing shoulder to shoulder. There was a winged, half-startled look in Jane's lovely face and the pearls took light from her throat. But Tony's black head was erect and he was smiling with the trained knowledge of his world.

The smart breeze of chatter paused among those who had met the new guest. Mrs. Kaye, and those who had not. Bertram Cotter, at Jane's left, grew redder, his brown eyes on his plate. Better than anyone there, he realized the amount Lorna had had to drink, and how brightly burned the fuse of her nerves toward sheer dynamite. Devoutly he wished he had held his tongue earlier in the afternoon.

Then Tony put his head under Jane's arm as they stepped forward. An easy, graceful gesture precluding apology for their late arrival. But to Lorna, on the brink of hysteria, it blazed them bold, increasing the menace of his girl.

And something seemed to snap in Lorna's brain. "So here you are!" she cried so shrilly that, in the hush, the older Howlands paused in their upward movement of greeting.

"Why, Lorna instead of emerald?" Lorna's high voice went on. "We all expected to see the Kaye emeralds tonight."

Jane halted, fixed in the pink candle shine. Behind her, Tony's shoulders stiffened.

"Tony, darling, I can't help it—I MUST tell." Lorna's mouth twisted open for that high laugh that jangled through the air. She clutched the edge of the table, swaying. In front of her every-thing seemed to be dancing in a wind of faces, crystal and silver.

"Look at your Tony, my fascinating, wicked Tony—" she cried to all those wavy heads. "We're engaged, you know, and I belong to no one going on with this farce. You hired the lady to make John jealous, didn't you? But you didn't marry her—"

CHAPTER XVIII
TONY'S PLAN

Lorna's hysterical accusation quivered into the hushed air of the Howland porch, paralyzing the dinner guests. At the small flowered tables they sat shocked into silence by the unforgiveable sin of scandal openly flung. Their eyes shifted from Anthony Kaye's set rigid figure to the gold and white girl beside him. Quite true, she was not wearing the famous Kaye emeralds—the traditional insignia of Kaye wives on formal occasions.

Mr. and Mrs. Howland reached their daughter, trying to calm her. Bertram Cotter, his round eyes flecked with red, was on his feet. This was his fault for having to Lorna over too many cocktails. "For G——'s sake, shut up! You're tight," he muttered.

But nothing now could shut Lorna up. "It's true!" she cried. "Tony and I are engaged. And he NEVER married."

Tony Kaye moved with lightning speed, his grey eyes cold as steel under level black brows. He swept over Lorna. "You'll apologize to-morrow, my wife," he said. "I happen to be having the emeralds reset for her."

His blunt downward gaze cut through the mists of fear and hate that had worked her to this moment of folly. Too late to make any difference. She could only plunge deeper. She pointed to Bertram. "Ask him, then, if I'm lying."

Jane hadn't moved. She stood as if sculptured in pale gold, with eyes of blue jewels. Now from the heads of strangers, she looked at Bertram, who had betrayed—how much of her secret?—to Lorna.

Bertram's lips opened, closed, his cheeks flushed to purple. "I don't know what she's talking about," he blurted at last. He sat down heavily, staring again at his plate.

Quitting on her. Leaving her to face the music. Suddenly Lorna laughed, her red head flung back. Her laughter rose—broke. "As if I could have invented such a thing. Oh, this is too funny," she gasped.

"I'm waiting for your apology," Tony said clearly. "Then my wife and I will leave."

Jane's mind raced with her heart as he turned back toward her, eyes under his tan. She had only to lift her voice and tell them all that Lorna was the Comte's Paule's mistress. Proof enough in his studio. But the words wouldn't come.

"I'll take nothing back." And Lorna burst into sobs. Her mother tugged at her arm, whispering.

Tony wheeled around in his stride back to Jane. "I can imagine no explanation of an exhibition of extraordinary bad taste," he said sternly. "But I suggest a rest cure for Miss Howland." He dared those friends of his world to doubt the girl he had brought here to introduce to them.

In that very defiance, Jane read his defeat. Reckless, headstrong, he had considered himself immune from conventions. But in the tension around the pink candle-light shade, the hovered gleaming and lingering hands, those old friends were taking sides, and she stained him. Once he left this house with her, his challenge would cut him off from both camps. And that would embitter him for life.

Lorna, still sobbing, was being led away by Mrs. Howland. Jane turned impulsively, reaching after them, to catch up with them in the hall.

Ignoring Mrs. Howland's stiffed explanation, she said to Lorna: "I want to speak to you."

"Go away," Lorna wailed.

"The child's sick," Mrs. Howland spoke sharply, her face ravaged with worry.

"She's no more sick than I am," Jane put her hand on the twitching bare shoulder. "You'd better listen—and quickly," she said.

Lorna's sobs trailed away. "What d'you want?" she murmured against her mother's shoulder. "Oh, well, if you insist. Let go of mother—" She twisted out of the sheltering arms. One glimpse at Jane, and she followed down their empty hall to be edge of the stairs as Tony appeared from the living room, Mr. Howland jerkily at his side.

Jane said quickly and curtly to Lorna standing by the stairs: "I'll be here. Don't hurt. If you don't go back in there and fix this up for him, I'll go and tell them the whole sordid story—that you pretended to marry him while you were having an affair with la Paule. I haven't even told Tony that—yet.

It depends on you what I do."

Lorna stared at her. She meant it. There was no fear in those blue eyes, no weakness to that chin. Swiftly it rushed into Lorna's mind that the harm was done to his girl, in any case. An appeal wouldn't stop gossip, but it might soften Tony so far in time to come.

"Have it your own way," she snapped. "Just a second." She darted up the stairs, clicked on the lights of her room, leaving a moment against the wall, her hand on her heart. Feeling sick. The mirror reflected her small white face, the brilliant green of her dress. Complete havoc to her looks—to her hopes. She must have been insane to let go Powder. Lipstick. Oh G— she couldn't think—!

Downstairs again to the hall. Jane stood with Tony and the Howlands. Their low voices died away.

"Well, has she told you what I'm going to do?" Lorna flung at them defiantly. "Wash you while again, Tony." Her green eyes clashed with Jane's, and she tore past them before the could stop her.

On the porch the dreadful dinner had mechanically continued under fitful gusts of talk. The guests were chained there, were tending to eat and chat. They couldn't all rise in a body and leave, and they were terribly sorry for the older Howlands.

Lorna marched back to her seat in another silence. She stood poised, conscious that Bertram Cotter had pushed back his chair.

"I'm sorry. I had too much to drink," she said in a high, flat voice. "I didn't know what I was saying, but I meant it as a joke, of course. It simply popped into my head when I saw that—Mrs. Kaye's wearing the emeralds. Let's forget it. They're gone home

TARZAN THE MAGNIFICENT

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

"Why should Woora want to torture me to death instead of throwing me to the lions?" Tarzan asked. "It doesn't want to have you decapitated," he thinks you're smart, so he wants your brain to eat. He believes that'll add to his own cleverness."
Tarzan nodded calmly, then said: "You are an Englishman. What are you doing here?" "I'm Kali captured me years ago. Then the Zull took me in a raid. The Zull are a little better. The women are the bosses, but at least they allow us to be warriors and hunters."
Lord sighed. "Some of us captives and even a few Zull have been plotting to escape. We were going to kill Woora and stolen the big emerald. With that we could bribe Mafka to let us pass through the Kali country. That's the only way to reach the outer world."
The man shrugged and turned away hopelessly. "But that dream is over, so far as I'm concerned. I'm finished." "Don't give up yet," Tarzan encouraged; "there's a bare chance we might be able to escape. The odds are against us, but I shall take the chance!

MANUFACTURER DIES

Toronto, Aug. 30 (CP)—William A. Fisher, 83, Vice-President of the F. W. Fisher Company, Limited, printers and paper box manufacturers, died here today. President of Toronto since 1872, Mr. Fisher retired from business six years ago.

A son, three daughters, including Mrs. L. Horncastle, Hamilton, and Miss Flora Fisher, a missionary at Tientsin, Northern Ontario, survive.

DR. TWINING DIES

Cleveland, Aug. 30 (CP)—Dr. Charles Franklin Thwing, President emeritus of Western Reserve University, died Sunday. He was 83. Before retiring, in 1921, Dr. Thwing established a record of 31 years' continuous service as head of the University, longer than any living college or university president in the United States. Though only 67, he gave as his reason that "it is not fair to Mr. Ayer—to bridge successfully two generations."

FOUND DYING ON HIGHWAY

Blenheim, Ont., Aug. 30 (CP)—Found unconscious on a highway south of here, 14-year-old Margaret Bernice Cotter of Dawn township died early today in Chatham General Hospital. Police were investigating the case, finding no marks indicating the boy had been struck by a motor car.

The boy's unconscious form was noticed on the Fourth Concession by Garland Coffel and Floyd Moran, both of Marlin. Fearing it might be a hold-up trap to get them to stop, they did not investigate but reported the matter to Chief Constable W. T. Fenton here. Chief Fenton, with Coroner Hembling, from whose the lad was taken to Chatham Hospital, where he appeared to have suffered head injuries.

HARVESTING IS IN FULL SWING

Toronto, Aug. 31.—Harvesting is in full swing throughout Ontario this week, the Ontario Department of Agriculture finds in its weekly crop report. Threshing, however, is fast getting under way in Northern Ontario but is practically completed in Grey County.

Wheat is yielding 30 to 40 bushels to the acre generally but rust has caused considerable damage in Dundas County and Bothwell district. Alfalfa is being threshed in southwestern Ontario with a yield ranging mostly from two to four bushels per acre, although in Haldimand County seedings have been raised and there is fears for the alfalfa seed crop.

In Central Ontario, the tomato crop in Northumberland County is not likely to be large due to blackrot, sunscalds, cracks. Prince Edward County tomatoes are a good crop with more being canned daily in any previous season. Corn, too, is the best in years.

Ontario County pastures are in good condition, but weathering reduced the yield of the grain crop. Peterborough reports oats disappointing.

Middlesex has an active demand for heavy bulked steers, several loads of which went at $8 to $9.50. Cheese production in Lennox and Addington is keeping up well with colored selling at 14¾, white at 14 cents. Buyers are picking up young Algoma cattle, paying $35 to $40 for good two-year-olds and $20 to $25 for yearlings.

MARKET COMMENT

Last week's market witnessed a continuation of the decline, brought about in large measure by, more intense hostilities in China and the recent fatal shooting of the British Ambassador by Japanese airmen. Despite the seriousness of the situation, it is not believed that the trouble in the Far East will bring in other nations. Fundamental conditions in the domestic field have been entirely overlooked, despite the fact that conditions in the Dominion are heartening.

As is generally known, English newsprint mills in July 1936 made contracts for both 1937 and 1938 at £10.0.0 per long ton. The mills had failed, however, to provide themselves with 1938 supply of wood and pulps and sharp increases in the prices of these raw materials made it apparent a few months ago that the £10.0.0 power print contract price for 1938 would be refnous to the mills. (Per new 1938 contracts, the British Empire mills are quoting a minimum of £14.0.0, an increase of £17.79 per short ton at current rate of exchange).

One would imagine that with a couple of "wars" in progress, the stocks to be most favoured would be the base metals; yet these securities have been quite weak in the last week or so. This is only an indication of the fact that present nervousness develops, public reasoning disappears and the law of supply and demand reigns supreme.

P. M. Richards, financial editor of Saturday Night, expresses the opinion that Canadian Car and Foundry will make an effort to start paying off dividend arrears amounting to about $7 per preferred share on the reasonably near future. Official estimate places the company's gross earnings for the fiscal year ending December 30, 1937, will approximate $30,000,000, and profits should certainly be in favorable contrast to the sum of $7,858 shown in the previous twelve months—the first profit shown in five years. A record order for 60 passenger cars placed by the Canadian National Railways, will send the company into the 1937-38 fiscal year on a good backing.

With the summer vacations coming to an end, the stock market should, from now on, receive more attention from investors and the public generally. Seasonal influences have also been expected to be felt, indicating some ground for the general concensus that a better market will develop after Labor Day.

The mining market may give a better account of itself in the not distant future, as disappointment over the Consolidated Chibougamau development is disappearing and many traders feel that plenty of bargains abound in the mining section of the market.

International Nickel continues to be considerable foreign interest in International Nickel of Canada common stock. In view of this, and having in mind that the London market seemed more upset than New York over the Chinese developments, "IN" has given an excellent account of itself marketwise during the past week. The main reason for this display is of course because nothing occurs in this connection authoritative sources to change opinion in the financial fervice that this company will be earning in the neighborhood of $3.00 a share in the first quarter of 1937 and, that, being the case, there appears to be a liberal dividend of 75 cents a share for the quarter could be paid. The current disbursement is 50 cents a share quarterly.

A Warning From Mr. Babson

A few months ago, in fact making, according to an article written for Sunday's New York Herald Tribune by that tireless trader and financial forecaster, Mr. Roger W. Babson, particularly for our people of mind, Mr Babson does not see us standing at the brink of the precipice. In fact, as near as he comes to setting a definite date is to November 1, when he is beginning to think of it" and that "pre-recession will take place somewhere along the line. Sooner or later a weak link will break." But if he is a conservative in the matter of naming the line and date of breaking, he is radical in the sage of Wellesley Hills does not hesitate when he refers to the possible dimensions. For very well he worse than the last one. Mr. Babson says that it is a long distance off indeed, it is certain that the next one will be much worse shape than it was in 1929.

To allay unnecessary apprehension, however, it should be stated that Mr. Babson only as the seer who predicted nearly a year ago that the stock market in the fall of 1929, let it be understood that, "Business is sound." Mr. Babson's predictions can only serve to confuse and to bring to that of Alfred Cowles 3d, who has demonstrated that the first "prediction is the most gratuitous of human follies," comments this important paper published in the Monday's edition. Mr. Babson has frequently said the same thing—right for the wrong reason. In 1910, for example he predicted the end of the world. In 1929, although the basis was wrong, he was right. In 1937, the inflation which was to sweep the country, winding up in the grand conflagration of 1929, he was pointing out that we had seen the end of boom and slump. So, he has issued the first of a series of warnings, the last one of which has come to be popularly associated with the market collapse. Incidentally, Mr. Babson far underrated the depth or duration of the depression and was already seeing "recovery" by the fall of 1930.

But, Mr. Babson is overlooking, it seems to us, the most important source of danger. This is artificially easy money. If a Federal Reserve Board should, on a recession an abnormal credit boom in 1937-39 by reducing the re-discount rate to 3½ per cent. what can we expect to result in the long run from the action of the present Treasury-dictated Reserve Board which, having refused government bonds to unprecedented levels, has just thrown its resources on their support by reducing the rediscount rate to the abnormally low level of 1 per cent?

Capps Gold Mine

Very satisfactory reports continue to come forward from Capps Gold Mine, where mining operations are being driven ahead, in preparation for the starting of the 100 ton mill next month. Drifting is proceeding on the 126 foot level of the No. 3 Shaft on the Capps Vein, and on two faces on the 310 foot level of the No. 5 Shaft on the Jane Vein. These two veins appear to be coming together in the nature of a triangle, (or will cross) some hundreds of feet south of the above mentioned shafts and drifts are being driven from each shaft toward the junction or apex, and a very interesting situation is looked for ahead of the present drift faces.

The condition found at the 310 foot level on the Jane Vein is considered to be highly important, due to the fact that the mineralized zone, is in solid rock formation. In this regard Hugh Harding, Mine Manager says—"The 310 ft. level definitely proves that values extend below the level established. The vein structure is wide and well defined and has the appearance of a definite fracture which should go to indefinite depths."

TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE CLOSE

Toronto, Aug. 31 (CP)—The Toronto share market closed the day and the month with a firm tone but trading was light. Volume for the day was small, well under the average for the summer. Buying lifted the steels moderately and prices were irregularly higher for the foods, utilities, holding and miscellaneous issues. Western oils showed practically no change in the average.

The Canada Steamship Lines issues were marked up in fair volume, and closing prices were higher for Common, Preferred, Montreal Power and Consumers Gas. Alcohol "B" was in demand, and the close was up ½ for Distillers-Seagrams. Massey Harris was in demand and the close was ¼ ahead. Cockshutt Plow added ½.

Aluminium Limited, Canadian Car, United Steel, Burlington Steel and Frost Preferred registered gains and the miscellaneous industrials fractional gains were held by International Nickel, Nipissing, Noranda and Bathurst Power A. Paper stocks showed strong gains. Canada Preferred up about two points and consolidated ½.

A steady market prevailed for the senior oils and in the western group small gains.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, Aug. 31.—(AP)—The stock market today took its time about extending Monday's rally, finishing laboriously mixed to enjoy into higher territory.

While net gains of fractions to a point or more were reduced in many instances from the final hour, profit selling failed to depress the list as a whole.

Transactions exceptionally slow but volume was slightly ahead of the preceding day's dullness. Transfers were about 500,000 shares.

HOG QUOTATIONS

Toronto, Aug. 31.—(CP)—One further reduction in dressed weight prices was recorded on Ontario hog markets today when Harris reported a drop of 30 cents. All other markets quoted prices unchanged.

Liveweights: Bradford, $9.35; Hull, $9.50; Peterborough, $9.40; Stratford, $9; London $9; Chatham, $9.

Dressedweights: Barrie, $12.65; Hull $13.10; Kitchener, $12; Peterborough $12.65; Stratford, $13; Chatham $13.25.

Produce Prices on Montreal Market

Montreal, Aug. 31—Local cheese market levels were higher yesterday, prices moving up following stronger week-end country boards, they in turn having advanced on forward export sales in the latter part of last week. Eggs were in fair supply, butter was firm but little changed. Potatoes and poultry were steady. Receipts were 222 cases eggs, 161 boxes of butter and 2000 boxes of cheese, excluding local arrivals. Receipts for last week were 7,193 cases of eggs, 19,-441 boxes of butter and 16,000 boxes of cheese, instead of 2,230, 18,172 and 23,891 respectively a year ago. Yesterday, the latter being Saturday receipts.

Sales at the Canadian Commodity Exchange were 800 boxes of butter, 2,000 boxes of cheese, 26 7-8c, with the close quoting 26 7-8c to 27c, for Quebec secondscore, and 26 1-8c to 26 1-4c for Quebec seconds.

The cheese market was steady with 14 1-2c for No. 1 Ontario' white, 14 1-4c for No. 1 Ontario colored, 14c for No. 1 Quebec white and 14 1-8c for No. 1 Quebec colored.

On the egg market graded shipments in free cases were generally 24c for A-pullets, 23c for A-specials, 22c for A-pullets, 22c for A-firsts, 21c for A-seconds, quoting the first grade 1-2c lower. Offerings at the Commodity Exchange were 27 1-2c for A-large, 26c for A-medium, 23 1-2c for B and 20c for C.

Livestock

Montreal, Aug. 31.—(CP)—Calves were in good demand during early trading and additional livestock markets today while other sections held unchanged.

Receipts: Cattle 50; calves 341; hogs 1,200; sheep 1,500; hogs 1,200.

Butcher cows ranged from $3.75 to $4.75 according to quality while common bulls made $2.50 to $2.50 with one good kind up to $3.50.

Good veal calves sold at $9 and common lights around $8. The bulk of sales were made on medium to medium good kinds at $8.50 Grasscars ranged from $3.50 to $4.25.

Lambs, spring, 200 pounds went at $8.50 with a cut of $2 a hundredweight on culls and bucks. Sheep made from $2.50 to $3.50.

Bacon hogs, fed and watered, sold at $10 with 2 a hog premium on selects and the usual cuts on others. Sows went at the yards at $8 and $9 and stags from $7 to $8.

Montreal, Aug. 31.—(CP)—Trade was slow and prices generally steady on the Montreal Livestock Market today. Most offerings were of plain quality on the cattle division, but there was a fairly active demand and lambs reflected market's prevailing strength. Cattle holdover from yesterday was 1400 head.

Receipts reported by the Dominion Livestock Service: Cattle 1179; calves 640; hogs 1050; sheep and lambs 875.

NATIONS LEAGUE

Ethiopian Fiasco

France and England organized behind the scenes in an endeavor to keep Italy and Germany apart. They had weakened the League and permitted Italy to conquer Ethiopia, a Abyssinian affair—and it did not keep Italy and Germany apart. The two dictatorships had allied and both, operating in the Spanish War on the side of General Franco, aided the insurgents. The League had to take backwater on the Ethiopian question.

Plots Against Haile Selassie

An effort was made to have the Ethiopian delegates exhibited when Mussolini first addressed them, examination to was greater by contrast. Haile Selassie, Ethiopian's legal representative at the League of Nations, a prominent French professor, was threatened with the loss of his position if he was charged without contradiction, by the French Government, if he refused his brief for the dark kingdom. All kinds of intrigue went on behind the scenes with France and England working hand in hand to keep Italy and Germany apart, and getting practically nowhere.

It is no longer with the representative of the Spanish Government at the assembly was also frustrated by the failure of the League in the case of his government before the League very plainly. Germany and Italy left the League because they could not control its actions and knew their actions would not be approved by the League, or be according to the covenant which binds all nation members of the League.

London Bobby Made Good

Russia and New Zealand spokesmen stood strongly for action which would strengthen the League, but Russia is not a force at present and New Zealand's voice alone makes it efficient. But the prospect is that further changes in the constitution of the League will come on it rather than strengthen. New Zealand's representative at the League was a former London bobby who had made good down there. His remarks made a profound impression on the League. Bruce, a tremendous big man, another personality whose speeches were given to the perverted attention Australia feels that another war would find Great Britain too busy elsewhere to protect Australia, and consequently that country desires the League of Nations to become strong and effective and pledges all the military and naval supports of Australia to help enforce the League's decrees.

It is interesting to note, said the speaker, that Canada was the first nations that responded upon Italy in the Ethiopian Affair.

Canadianizing Peng Traffic

Other departments of the League of Nations which is divided into six commissions were discussed by Mr. Sifton, who emphasized particularly the work of the Health Commission of the League was receiving attention in connection with the curbing of the sale of habit-forming drugs, child labor, child health, etc. also successful has the health division been that it is considered essential to increase and still stimulate other departments and the work of the League of Nations.

Briefly but graphically, Mr. Sifton sketched the various branches of activities of the League of Nations, its possibilities and its difficulties. Its potentialities are great for the nations are honest and willing to give and take and really desire peace.

Mr. Sifton was introduced by Mr. Wallace Nesbitt, and a vote of thanks was expressed by Fred Dodson, K.C., and President Fred Hamilton.
